LIVING FAITH, &c.

Acts xv. 9. compared with Gal. v. 6. PURIFYING THEIR HEARTS BY FAITH, FAITH WHICH WORKETH BY LOVE.

THE church of Christ, chosen out of the world to bear his crofs and to partake of his holinefs, has, from the very nature of her vocation, many obftacles to furmount, and many foes to vanquish. A warfare, on the iffue of which are flaked her privileges, her confolations, her everlasting hope, opens an ample field for exertion, and ought to concentrate her strength and wifdom. Unhappily, however, controverfies about things which do not involve her fubftantial interefts, have, at all times, interrupted her peace and marred her beau-Weaknefs, prejudice, and paffion found their ty. way into the little family of the Mafter himfelf; and, even after the descent of the Spirit of truth, invaded and violated his fanctuary. Difputes concerning the Mofaic ritual had arifen among Christians to fo great a height, and were conducted with fo much ardour and fo little love, that the power of godliness was in danger of being flifled in a contest about the form, and the Head of the church deemed it neceffary to interpofe his rebuke. "Whether yeare called Jews or Gentiles: whether ye observe or negled fome formulas of the typical law, are not questions which should kindle your animofities and exhaust your vigours. A more awful subject claims your enquiries. While you are occupied in vain jangling, the winged moments are hurrying your fouls to their eternal state. Are you ready to depart? Is your title to the kingdom clear? Paufe, liften, exam-In Christ Jefus neither circumcifion availeth ine. any thing, nor uncircumcifion; but a new creature; but a faith of the operation of God; but a faith which purifies the heart and works by love."

To us, my brethren, not lefs than to those early professors of the cross, is the heavenly oracle addreffed. We, too, have our weakneffes, our prejudices, our passions, which often embark us in foolifh and frivolous litigation. We, too, have immortal fouls of which the whole world cannot repay the lofs, and which are haftening to the bar of God's righteousness. Come, then, let us endeavour to collect our wandering thoughts; to fhut out the illusions of external habit; to put a negative on the importunities of fenfe, and try whether our religion will endure the ordeal of God's If our faith is genuine, it purifies the word. heart, and works by love. Precious faith, therefore, in its effects upon spiritual character; that faith which draws the line of immutable diffinction between a believer and an unbeliever, and without which no man has a right to call himfelf a Chriftian, is the fubject of our prefent confideration. And while the treafure is in an earthen veffel, may the excellency of the power be of God!

Before we attempt to analyfe the operations of faith, we must obtain correct views of its nature.

Some imagine it to be a general profession of Christianity, and a decent compliance with its ceremonial. They accordingly compliment each other's religion, and are astonissed and displeased if we demur at conceding that all are good Christians who have not ranged themselves under the banners of open infidelity.

Others, advancing a ftep farther, fuppofe that faith is an affent to the truth of the gofpel founded on the inveftigation of its rational evidence.— Without afking what proportion of the multitudes who profefs Chriftianity have either leifure, or means, or talents for fuch an inveftigation, let us teft this dogma by plain fact. Among those legions of accurfed fpirits whom God has delivered into chains of darknefs to be referved unto judgment, and their miferable affociates of the human race, who have already perisched from his prefence, there is not one who doubts the truth of revelation. Men may be fceptics in this world, but they carry no fcepticism with them into the bottomless pit. They have their rational evidence which it is impoffible to refift; evidence, fhining in the blaze of everlasting burnings, that every word of God is pure. That faith, then, by which we are faved, must be altogether different from a conviction. however rational, which is yet compatible with a ftate of perdition. If any incline to fet light by this reprefentation, as taking the advantage of our ignorance, and retreating into obfcurity which we cannot explore, let him open his eyes on the common occurrences of life. He may fee, for there is not even the fhadow of concealment, he may fee both these good Christians of fashion; and these good Christians of argument, without God in the world-He may fee them betraying those very tempers, and purfuing those very courses, by which the Bible describes the workers of iniquity-He may fee them defpifing, reproaching, perfecuting that profession and practice, which, if the Scriptures are true, must belong to fuch as live godly in Christ Jesus. Of both these classes of pretended Christians the faith is found to be spurious, and at an infinite remove from the faith of God's elect; for in neither of them does it purify the heart, or work by love. The Scriptures teach us better.

As faith, in general, is reliance upon testimony, and refpects folely the veracity of the testifier; fo that faith which constitutes a man a believer before God, is a fimple and absolute reliance upon his testtimony, exhibited in his word, on this folid and SINGLE ground, that he is the God who cannot lie. It was not a process of reasoning, which riveted in Abraham's mind the perfuasion that in his feed all the nations of the earth (hould be bleffed, and procured him the appellation of the father of the faithful. It was an act of NAKED TRUST in the veracity of his covenant-God, not only without but above, and against the confultations of flesh and blood. Abraham BELIEVED GOD, believed him in hope, against hope; and it was counted to him for righteousness. It is the same at this hour. The mouth of the Lord hath (poken it-must filence every objection, and cut fhort every debate. And they who do not thus receive the Scriptures, cannot give another proof that they believe in God, as a promifing God, at all.

The teftimony of God which faith respects, comprising the whole revelation of his will, centers, particularly, in the free grant which he has made of his Son, the Lord Jesus Christ, to finners of the human race; affuring them, that whosoever believeth on him shall not perish, but shall have everlasting life; that he will be a Father unto them, and they shall be his fons and his daughters; that he will dwell in them, and walk in them, and be their God, bless them, in their precious Redeemer, with all spiritual and heavenly bless. Now that faith after which we are inquiring, consists precisely in "receiving " and refting upon Christ Jesus for falvation, as he " is offered to us in the gospel," that is, in the testimony of his Father.

This faith is not the creature of human power. It is a contradiction to suppose that men can argue themfelves, or be argued by others, into a reliance upon the testimony of God. Because this implies a fpiritual perception of his eternal veracity: Whereas the reafon of man is corrupted by fin. and the natural tendency of corrupted reafon is to change the truth of God into a lie. Nothing can rife above its own level, nor pass the limits of its being. It were more rational to expect that men should be born of beasts, or angels of men, than that a principle of life and purity fhould be engendered by death in a mais of corruption: And carnal men are DEAD in trespasses and fins. Cast it, therefore, into the fairest mould; polish, and adorn it with your most exquisite skill, that which is born of the fle/h will ftill be fle/h; weak, corrupt, abominable: enmity against the law of God, and, if poffible, more rank enmity against the gofpel of Jefus Chrift. From this fource it is vain to look for faith in his blood. We must feek it higher.

It is of divine original. A gift which cometh down from the Father of lights: By grace are ye faved, through faith, and that not of yourfelves; it is the gift of God.

It is of grace—For it is one of those covenantmercies which were purchased by the Saviour's merit, and are freely bestowed for his fake. It is given us, on the behalf of Christ, to believe on his name.

Of grace—Becaufe it is a fruit of the gracious Spirit. As Jehovah the Sanctifier, he creates and preferves it in the foul. For this reafon he is called the Spirit of faith, which is, therefore, of the operation of God.

FROM this faith, there refult two glorious effects. Let us confider them, in their turn, as they are flated in the text.

I. Ir purifies the heart.

HUMAN depravity is a first principle in the oracles of God. From within, out of the heart, proceed those evil thoughts, and evil words, and evil deeds, which defile, difgrace, and destroy the man. And he who refuses to admit the fevere application of this doctrine to himfelf, has not yet arrived at the point from which he must fet out in a course of real and confistent piety. He may, indeed, fatter himfelf in his own eyes until his iniquity be found to be hateful, but who shall ascend into the hill of God? or who shall stand in his holy place? He, and he only, who has clean hands, and a pure heart. Now, as it is the grace of faith by which a finner obtains that purity which qualifies him for the fellowship and kingdom of God, we are to inquire, In what the purity of the heart confifts? and what is the influence of faith in producing it?

THE heart is a term by which the Scriptures frequently express the faculties and affections of man. As the pollutions of fin have pervaded them all, they all need the purification of grace.

At the head of the perverted tribe stands a guilty confcience. Stern, gloomy, suspicious, it cannot abide the presence of a righteous God; and yet lass the offender with a whip of scorpions. To render the confcience pure, pardon must intervene and shelter it from that curse which rouses both its resentments and its terrors. This is effected by the blood of the covenant, which, speaking better things than the blood of Abel, sprinkles the heart from an evil confcience.

The will is purified, when it is delivered from its rebellion against the authority of God, and cordially submits to his good pleasure. This, too, is from above: For his people are made willing in the day of his power.

The understanding is purified, when its errors are corrected, and the mists of delution diffipated. When its estimate of fin and holines; of things carnal and things spiritual; of time and of eternity, corresponds with the sentence of the divine word. This also is from above. The eyes of our understanding are enlightened, that we may know what is the hope of his calling, and what is the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the faints; and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us-mard who believe.

In fine, the affections are purified when they are diverted from objects trifling and bafe, to objects great and dignified. When they ceafe to be at the command of every hellifh fuggestion, and every vagrant luft-When they add to the crucifixion of those profligate appetites in the gratification of which the ungodly man places his honour, his profit, and his paradife, their delight in a reconciled God, as the infinite good-When they afpire to things above, where Jefus Christ fitteth at God's right hand; breathe after his communion; and are disciplined and chastened as becometh the affections of a breaft which the Holy Ghoft condescends to make his temple.-Such affections are furely from heavenly infpiration: for thus faith God, I will fprinkle clean water upon you, and you shall be clean; from all your filthinefs and from all your idols will I cleanfe you. A new heart alfo will I give you, and a new fpirit will I put within you; I will take away the stony heart out of your sless, and I will give you a heart of flesh.

WHILE the purification of the heart, thus explained from the Scriptures, is the work of the divine Spirit, it is accomplished by the inftrumentality of faith. For he purifies the heart by faith. Under his bleffed direction, the grace of faith polfeffes a double influence.

1. As a principle of moral function," it prefents to the mind confiderations the most forcible and tender for breaking the power of fin, and promoting the reign of holinefs. The prefence, the majefty, the holinefs of God-the fanctity of his law-his everlafting love in the Lord Jefus-the affecting expression of that love in fetting him forth to be a propitiation for fin-The wonders of his pardoning mercy-The grace of Chrift Jefus himfelf in becoming fin for them, that they might be made the righteoufnefs of God in him-The condefcenfion of the Holy Ghoft, who deigns to dwell in them as their Sanctifier-The genius of their vocation-The connexion of holy obedience with their own peace, their brethren's comfort, and their Master's glory-These, and fimilar motives which arife from the exercife of precious faith, operate mightily in caufing believers to walk humbly with their God. The love of Christ constraineth us, even as a rational inducement, to live henceforth not unto ourfelves, but unto him that died for us and rofe again. And while a graceless man is deterred from the commission of crime, not by a regard to God's authority, or by gratitude for his loving-kindnefs, but by calculations of prudence, or fear of penalty, a Chriftian, acting like himself, repels temptation with a more generous and filial remonstrance,

* By moral fusion is here meant not that kind of reafoning which one graceless man may address to the underflanding of another: but those perfusives to holiness which the Spirit of God in his word address to his grace in the heart. These faith applies and improves.

How can I do this great wickedness and fin again, God !

Bur, brethren, I fhould wrong the Redeemer's truth, and enfeeble the confolations of his people, were I to confine the efficacy of faith in purifying the heart to the influence of motive. I have not mentioned its chief prerogative; for,

2. FAITH is that invaluable grace by which we have both union and communion with our Lord Jefus Chrift. In the moment of believing, I become, though naturally an accurfed branch, a tree of righteoufnefs, the planting of Fehovah that he may be glorified : I am no longer a root in a dry ground, but am planted by the rivers of water, even the water of life, which proceedeth out of the throne of God, and of the Lamb.-I am engrafted into the true vine, and bring forth fruit in participating of its fap and fatnefs.-I am made a member of the body of Christ, of his flesh, and of his bones; fo that the Spirit which animates his body pervades every fibre of my frame as one of its living members. His vital influence warms my heart. Becaufe he lives, I live: Becaufe he is holy, I am holy: Because he hath died unto fin, I reckon myself dead unto fin. This is the fruit of union.

Communion with him is, properly speaking, a common interest with him in his covenant-perfection. The benefits of this communion flow into the soul in the exercise of faith. Whatever Jesus has done for his people, (and their fanchification is the beft part of his work,) he conveys to them in the promile of the gospel, and that promise is enjoyed in believing. It is by faith that I live upon the Great God my Saviour, and make use of him as Jehovah my strength. By faith I am privileged to go with boldnefs into the holieft of all, and, be it reverently fpoken, to prefs my Father in heaven with reafons as ftrong why he fhould fanctify me, as he can addrefs to me why I fhould endeavour to fanctify myfelf. Lord, am I not thine ? the called of thy grace? redeemed by the blood of thy dear. Son? Haft thou not promifed ? Haft thou not fworn? Haft thou not pledged thy being, that none who come to thee in his name shall be rejected? Is it not for thy praise that my heart be purified, and I made meet for walking in the light of thy countenance among the nations of the faved. Wilt thou leave me to conflict alone unaided, unfriended, with my furious corruptions, and vy implacable foes? Wilt thou, though intreated for thy fervant David's fake, refuse to work in me all the good pleasure of thy goodness and the work of faith with power? I cannot, will not let thee go except thou blefs me. Such faith is ftrong; it is omnipotent; it lays hold on the very attributes of the Godhead, and brings prompt and effectual fuccour into the labouring fpirit. This is the reason why it purifies the heart. I know, that to fuch as have never been brought under the bond of God's covenant, I am fpeaking unintelligible things. Bleffed be his name, that, continuing carnal, ye cannot understand them. If ye could, our hope would be no better than your own. But I fpeak to fome whole burning fouls fay Amen to the doctrine, and rejoice in the confolation; who, in the ftruggle with corruption and temptation, have cried unto God with their voice, even unto God with their voice, and he heard their cry; and bowed his heavens and came down; gave them deliverance and victory; and fhed abroad in their boloms the ferenity of his grace.—These are precious demonstrations of his purifying their hearts by faith.

It is obvious, that the fruits of faith, which have been now enumerated, cannot be exposed to the eye of the worldling. Deposited in the hidden man of the heart, they are privileges and joys with which no ftranger intermeddles. Shall we thence conclude, that the faith from which they fpring is unfusceptible of external proof, and never extends its benign influence beyond the happy individual who posses it? By no means. This would be an error too gross for any but the theoretical religionist. The text as for it to a focial effect: For,

II. It does not more certainly purify the heart, than it worketh by love.

Love is the master-principle of all good fociety. It is the holy bond which connects man with man, and angel with angel, and angels with men, and all with God. It is itself an emanation from his own purity. For God is love: and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him. Confequently, the new man, whom regenerating grace creates in elected finners, and whole activities are maintained by faith, must be governed by love. Its first and most natural exercise is toward that God who hath loved them with an everlasting love. and therefore with loving-kindness hath drawn them. It is the apprehension by faith of Jehovah's love. to them in Chrift, anticipating them with mercy, forgiving them all trefpasses, loading them with covenant-favour, which softens their obduracy, melts them into tendernefs, and excites the gracious re-action of love toward their reconciled Father. We love him, fays an apoftle who had drunk deeply into the fpirit of his Mafter, we love him, becaufe he first loved us.

As an enemy to God is, by the very nature of his temper, an enemy to himfelf and to all other creatures, fo one in whofe heart the love of God is fhed abroad by the Holy Ghoft, not only confults his own true happinefs, but is led to confult the happinefs of others. Charity, faith the apoftle Paul, fuffereth long and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itfelf; is not puffed up; doth not behave itfelf unfeemly; feeketh not her own; is not eafily provoked; thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things; believeth all things; hopeth all things; endureth all things. The Scriptures, indeed, mark love to the brethren as the great practical proof of our Chriftianity. Nothing can be more peremptory than the language of the beloved disciple-If a man fay, "I love God," and hateth his brother, he is a LIAR: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? On this point, however, there will be little dispute. Men are inflinctively led, to meafure, by their social effects, all pretensions of love to God. The question before us, and of which the scriptural decision will be far from uniting the mass of suffrage, is, how faith works by love?

The apostle afferts, that the faith of a Christian, inftead of being a merely fpeculative affent to the abstract truth of the gospel, is an active moral principle, which cannot have its just course without embodying itself in deeds of goodness. The reasons are many and manifest-By faith in Christ Jesus, we are justified before God, our natural enmity against him is flain, and his love finds access to our hearts. By faith we embrace the exceeding great and precious promises, and, in embracing them, are made partakers of the divine nature; fo that we are filled with all the fulnefs of God; and out of the abundance of the heart, not only does the mouth fpeak, but the man act: By faith we converse with our Lord Jefus Chrift; are conformed to him; follow him in the regeneration; and learn to imitate that great example which he left us when he went about doing good. By faith we obtain the promiled Spirit who fanctifies our powers both of mind and body, fo that we yield our members inftruments of righteoufness unto. God. By faith in Chrift's blood, which redeems us from the curfe of the law, we are alfo liberated from the vaffalage of fin: for the ftrength of fin is the law; and receiving the law as fulfilled and fatisfied by his righteoufnefs, come under its obligation in his covenant, and are enabled to keep it by his grace. Now the fulfilling of the law, is love; love and kindnefs to God and our neighbour, in all our focial relations: It is, therefore, impossible that faith fhould not work by love.

All the directions of the book of God, for the practice of the moral virtues, confider them as the evolution of the principle of love refiding in a heart which has been purified by faith. Our Lord's fermon on the mount, by the perversion of which many have feduced themfelves and others into a lying confidence in their own fancied merits, was preached, not to the promifcuous multitude, but to his disciples, who professed faith in his name. And the fcriptures of the apoftles, especially the apostle of the Gentiles, follow the same order. They address their instructions to the church of God-to the faints-to fuch as have obtained like precious faith with themfelves. Not a moral precept escapes from their pen, till they have displayed the riches of redeeming love. But when, like wife master-builders, they have laid a broad and stable foundation in the doctrines of faith, they rear, without delay, the fair fabric of practical holinefs.---It is after they have conducted their pupils to the holiest of all, through the new and living way which

Jefus hath opened, that you hear their exhorting voice, Mortify, therefore, your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleannefs, inordinate affection, evil concupifcence, and covetoufnefs which is idolatry.—Put off alfo all thefe, anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of your mouth. Lie not one to another, feeing ye have put off the old man with his deeds, and have put on the new man which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him; where there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision; barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free; but Christ is all and in all. Put on, therefore, as the elect of God, (for this very reason that ye are his elect,) holy and beloved, put on bowels of mercies, kindnefs, humblenefs of mind, meeknefs, long-fuffering, forbearing one another, and forgiving one another if any man have a quarrel against any, even as Christ forgave you, so alfo do ye. And above all thefe things, above bowels of mercies, above kindnefs, above humblenefs of mind, above meeknefs, above long-fuffering, above forbearance, above forgiveness, above all these things, put on CHARITY which is the bond of perfectness. If the apostles, then, understood their own doctrine; or rather, if the Spirit, by whom they fpake, knows what is in man, we are not to look for real love, i. e. for true morality, from any who are not the children of God by faith in Christ Jefus. And, on the contrary, this faith is the most prolific fource of good actions; becaufe it purges the fountain of all action, and fends forth its vigorous and healthful fireams, purifying the heart, and working by love.

I fhould be unfaithful, my brethren, to truth and to you, were I to difmifs this fubject without employing its aid for repelling an attack which is often made upon the Christian religion—for refuting the calumny which pretended friends have thrown upon its peculiar glory, the doctrine of faith—for correcting the error of those who, feparating faith from holines, have a name to live, and are dead—and for fkimulating believers to evince, by their example, both the truth of their profession and the power of their faith.

The enemies of the gospel have invented various excuses for their infidelity. At one time, there is a defect of historical document: at another, they cannot fürrender their reafon to inexplicable myftery. Now, they are flumbled at a million fanctioned by miracle: then, the proofs of revelation are too abftracted and metaphysical : and prefently they discover, that no proof whatever can verify a revelation to a third perfon. But when they are driven from all thefe fubterfuges : when the "Christian apologist has demonstrated that it is not 'the want of evidence, but of honefty; that it is not an enlightened understanding, but a corrupted heart, which impels them to reject the religion of Iefus, they turn hardily round and impeach its moral influence !! They will, make it responsible for all the mifchiefs and crimes; for all the forrows, and convultions, and ruins which have fcourged the world fince its first propagation.

Before fuch a charge can be fubftantiated, the ftructure of the human mind must be altered; the nature of things reverfed; the doctrine of principle and motive abandoned forever. It is only for the forlorn hope of impiety to engage in an enterprize fo mad and desperate. Say, Can a religion which commands me to love my neighbour as my felf, generate or foster malignant and murderous passions? Can a religion which affures me, that all liars fall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, encourage a spirit of diffimulation and fraud? Can a religion which requires me to poffefs my veffel in fanctification and honour, indulge me in violating the laws of fexual purity? in breaking up the fanctuary of my neighbour's peace? in throwing upon the mercy of Scandal's clarion the fair fame of female virtue? Can a religion which forbids me to be conformed to this world, cherifh that infuriate ambition which hurls defolation over the earth, and fertilizes her fields with the blood of men? Can a religion ?-----But I forbear------From whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, even from your lufts? Those very lufts from which it is the province of faith to purify the heart. The infidel pleads for his unholy propensions, on the pretext that they are innocent, because they are natural: And when a thousand curfes to himfelf and to fociety follow their indulgence, he charges the confequence upon a religion which enjoins their crucifixion, and which, to give them their career, he trampled under foot. But ftop, vain man! Was it the religion of Jefus Christ, which, on its first promulgation, breathed out threatenings and flaughter ? fhut up the faints in prifon ? puni/hed them oft in every fynagogue ? compelled them to bla [pheme? and, being exceedingly mad against them, perfecuted them even unto strange cities? Was it the religion of Jefus Chrift which, in its fubsequent progress, illuminated the city of Rome with the conflagration of a thousand stakes, confuming, by the most excruciating of deaths, a thousand guiltless victims?* Was it the religion of Jefus Chrift which, at a later period, when the Tiber overflowed, or the Nile did not overflow; when the earth quaked, or the heavens withheld their rain; when famine or pestilence imote the nations, ordered its oppofers to the lions ?† Was it in obedience to the religion of Jefus Chrift, after the expulsion of pagan idolatry, that the mother of barlots and abominations of the earth became drunk with the blood of the faints and with the blood of the martyrs? Was it the religion of Jefus Chrift which, after being rejected with marks of unexampled infult, fuggefted to the knights-errant of blafpheny, the project of regenerating the world by the power of atheistical philosophy? Was it this religion which taught them to blot out the great moral inftitute of fociety, the Sabbath of the Lord? to extinguish the best affections of the human heart, to break alunder the strongest ties of human life, and to fubvert the bafis of human relations, by exploding the marriage-covenant. This, which infligated them to offer up hecatombs of human facrifices to every rifing and every fetting fun? to hew down, with equal indifference, the venerable matron and her hoary lord; the vigorous youth, the blooming maid, the fportive boy, and the prattling babe? and while they were thus writing the hiftory of their philosophical experiments in the blood of the dead and the tears of the living, to boaft the victories of their virtue? But my foul fickens-Ah, no! the wifdom which cometh from above, that wildom which the golpel teaches, is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be intreated; full of compassion and of good fruits; without partiality, and without hypocrify. Such was its imposing aspect in the primitive ages. "Give "me a man," faid a celebrated father of the church, the eloquent Lactantius, " give me a man paffion-"ate, flanderous, ungovernable: with a very few "words of God I will render him as placid as a "lamb. Give me a man greedy, avaricious, penu-"rious: I will give him back to you liberal, and " lavishing his gold with a munificent hand. Give "me a man who fhrinks from pain and death; and " he shall prefently contemn the stake, the gibbet, "the wild beaft. Give me one who is libidinous, "an adulterer, a debauchee; and you shall fee " him fober, chafte, temperate. Give me one cruel " and blood-thirfty; and that fury of his shall be "converted into clemency itfelf. Give me one "addicted to injuffice, to folly, to crime; and he "fhall, without delay, become juft and prudent, "and harmlefs.""

Similar, in proportion to its reception by faith, are still the effects of this bleffed gospel. What has exploded those vices which, though once practifed even by philosophers, cannot now be fo much as named? What has foftened the manners, and refined the intercourse, of men? What is it which turns any of them from fin to God, and makes them confcientious, humble, pure, though at the expence of ridicule and fcorn from the licentious and the gay? What has espoused the cause of suffering humanity? Who explores the hospital, the dungeon, the darkfome retreat of unknown, unpitied anguifh? The infidel philosopher? Alas, he amuses himself with dreams of universal benevolence, while the wretch perifhes unheeded at his feet: and fcruples not to murder the fpecies in detail, that he may promote its happines in the grofs! On his proud lift of general benefactors, you will look in vain for the name of a HOWARD; and in their fystem of conduct your fearch will be equally fruitless for the traces of his spirit. Chriftianity claims, as her own, both the man and his principles. She formed his character, sketched his plans, and infpired his zeal., And might the modefly of goodness be overcome; might the

Tell me not of those foul deeds which have been perpetrated in her name. Tell me not that her annals are filled with the exploits of imposture and fanaticism: that her priefts and her princes have been ambitious, profligate, and cruel: that they have bared the arm of perfecution, and fhed innocent blood upon the rack and the fcaffold : at the flake and in the field: that they have converted whole nations into hordes of banditti, and led them, under the aufpices of the crofs, to pillage and maffacre their brethren who boafted only the "fimple virtues" of pagans and infidels. The question is not what actions her name has been abused to fanctify, but what have accorded with her principles, and are prompted by her fpirit? It is no discovery of yesterday, that Satan is transformed into an angel of light; and therefore no great thing if his mini,^Aers alfo be transformed into ministers of righteousness. Ignorance and dishonesty have often borrowed a Christian guife for the more fuccessful practice of knavery and rapine. But when they have violated all the maxims of the Christian religion; when they have contemned her remonstrances, and stifled her cries; shall they be permitted to plead her authority? Or fhall the fcoffer infult her with the charge of being their accomplice and advifer? No! In fo far as men do not fludy whatfoever things are true, honefl, juft, pure, lovely, and of good report, they evince not the power of faith, but the power of unbelief; in other words, not the fpirit of the gofpel, but a fpirit directly opposed to it; i. e. the fpirit of infidelity. If, then, you think to juftify your incredulity by fhewing a man, who to a profession of Christianity adds a life of crime, the indignant gospel tears the mask from his face, and exposes to your view the features of a brother. Whatever be his profession, we discove his kindred; he acts wickedly, not because he is a Christian, but because he is not a Christian. His crimes configure with his hypocrify to prove him an infidel.

Here we must part with fome who have cheerfully accompanied us in the detection and reproof of avowed unbelievers. For I am to employ the doctrine of the text for refuting the calumny which pretended friends have thrown upon the peculiar glory of Christianity, the doctrine of faith.

Multitudes, and would to God that none of them were found among the teachers of religion, multitudes who profels warm zeal for revelation, are yet hoftile to all those cardinal truths which alone render it worthy of a ftruggle. Omitting the mockery of fuch as call Christ Lord, Lord, while they rob him of every perfection which qualifies him to be the Saviour of finners, let me call your attention to those whose enmity is particularly directed against the doctrine that has been preached to you this evening. Nothing, to use their own stile, can exceed their veneration for religion in general; but if you venture to speak of the righteoufness of the Son of God " imputed to us, and re-" ceived by faith alone ;" if you infift on the defperate wickedness of the heart, and the necessity of Almighty Power to regenerate and cleanfe it; if you rejoice in the bleffedness of that union with the Lord Jefus which places you beyond the reach of condemnation; so that neither death nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things prefent, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate you from his love, or fhut you out of his kingdom, you muft expect to pais, with rational Christians, for a weak though perhaps well-meaning enthuliast; nay, you mult expect to hear those bleffed truths which are the life of your foul, fligmatized as relaxing the obligations of the moral law; as withdrawing the most cogent motives to obey its precepts : as ministering incentives to all ungodliness. 1mpoffible! Nothing but ignorance of the grace of God in its faving energy, could give birth or aliment to fuch a flander. It proceeds on the supposition that a finner may be pardoned, and not fanctified; that he may be delivered from penalty, and yet retain an unabated affection for his lufts. Were this the fact; did faith in Chrift's blood fet him free from the condemning authority of God's law, and yet leave him under the tyranny of finful habits, there is no doubt, that it would encourage him to work all uncleannefs with greedinefs. But the reverse is true.

The blood of Jefus Chrift, applied by faith, does not more certainly abolifh guilt, than it paralizes huft. He is made of God unto us, in a connection which nothing can diffolve, wifdom, and righteoufnefs, and SANCTIFICATION. Our old man is crucified with him, that the body of fin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not ferve fin. The grace of ~ faith is the leading faculty of that new man, which after God is created in righteoufnefs and true holinefs. Holinefs is the proper element of a believer, as fin is the proper element of an unbeliever. And, therefore, although the notion of grace may be abused to licentiousness, the principle never can; for it is that principle from which we learn to deny ungodlinefs, and worldly lufts, and to live foberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world. To infinuate, then, that the doctrine of free and plenary juffification by faith in Chrift Jefus, tends to licentioufnefs, is to give the lie direct to the testimony of the Holy Ghoft, and to the uniform experience of his people. Whoever cherifhes fuch an opinion, however highly effected by himfelf or by others, is not a Christian : he is in the gall of bitterness and in the bond of iniquity. But there is no caufe of wonder. The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolifhness unto him. It has been fo from the beginning; and will continue fo to the end. The objection which he makes, at this hour, to the doctrine of grace, is as stale as it is unfounded. It is the very objection which was combated by the apoftle Paul. What fhall we fay then? exclaimed his adverfaries, when he preached jufti(29) fication by faith through the imputed righteoufnets of the Lord Jefus, and the absolute certainty of being faved from wrath through him in virtue of believing, what shall we fay then ? shall we continue in fin that grace may abound? Or, in modern language, Does not this doctrine of yours tempt men to throw the rein upon the neck of their paffions, by removing the fear of condemnation, and especially by furnishing them with the pretext, that the more they fin, the more is grave exalted in their pardon, feeing that where fin hath abounded, grace doth much more abound? The apostle admits, that the depraved heart is prone to draw fuch a conclufion, and that it was actually drawn by his enemies: who took occasion from it to represent him as making void the law. But he repels it with the most indignant reprobation. God forbid! The inference is abfurd. How shall we that are DEAD. to fin, LIVE any longer therein? That doctrine. therefore, which wicked men never accuse of leadding to licentiousness, is NOT the doctrine of God's word. That doctrine, on the contrary, against which, by mifreprefenting it, they bring this accufation, is the very doctrine of the apostle. But its true and only effect, which we maintain, which the Scriptures teach, and which all believers experience and exemplify, is, that fin shall not reign in their mortal body, that they should fulfil it in the lusts thereof.

Of the fame nature, and from the fame fource with the calumny which I have endeavoured to refute, is the practical error of many who, feparating faith from holinefs, have a name to live, and are dead. The error muft be rectified, for it is fatal. Some confole themfelves with their doctrinal accuracy, while their hearts and conduct are eftranged from moral rectitude. They hope that their faith, however inactive, fhall fave them at laft. Others, in the oppofite extreme, difregarding faith in our Lord Jefus Chrift, truft in their upright intentions and actions. They know little of what Chriftians call believing, but they are good moral men. Their gofpel is the trite and delufive aphorifm,

"He can't be wrong, whole life is in the right;" not confidering that

He can't be right, whole faith is in the wrong.

They talk, indeed, on both fides, with much familiarity, of "our holy religion," as if its best influences had descended upon themselves. Holy religion it is: But what made it yours? One of you does not pretend to have RECEIVED Chrift Fefus the Lord; the other, notwithstanding his profession, has no folicitude to WALK in him: and both are equally far from the falvation of God. Jefus Chrift is the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by him: No man entertains good thoughts, or performs good works, without being a partaker of his holinefs. Every plant which his heavenly Father hath not planted, fhall be rooted up. At the great day of his appearance to judge the world in righteoufnefs, no virtue will be approved which did not grow upon his crofs, was not confectated by his blood, and nourished by his Spirit. Such virtues, however they may be applauded here, are only brilliant acts of rebellion against him, and will not, for one moment, reprieve the rebels from the damnation of hell. Nor let those whose belief does not purify the heart, nor work by love, flatter themfelves that their condition is better, or that their doom shall be more tolerable. Whatever judgment shall be meafured to others, they who know their Lord's will, and do it not, shall be beaten with many firipes. Be not deceived. The threatening bears directly upon you. You profefs to know God, but in works you deny him. Your inconfistency reproaches his truth, and caufes his enemies to blaspheme. You lay flumbhing-blocks in the way of the unwary. You multiply the victims of that very infidelity against which you declaim: and, in as far as they have been feduced by your example, their blood fhall be required at your hands. For yourfelves, if you die without being renewed in the spirit of your minds. your faith will not fave you. The farce of a mock profession will terminate in the tragedy of real and everlasting woe. Oh, then, while it is called TO-DAY. harden not your hearts ! To finners of every clafs and character, the forgiveness of God is preached. From his throne in heaven the Saviour fpeaks this evening. Unto you, O men, do I call, and my voice is to the fons of men! Hearken unto me, ye fouthearted, that are far from righteoufnefs: behold I bring near my righteoufnefs. In him is grace, and peace, and life. Now, therefore, choose life that ye may live. And may his bleffed Spirit visit you with his falvation, creating in you that faith which purifies the heart, and works by love!

Finally, Let Christians be admonished by the doctrine of my text to evince, in their behaviour, both the truth of their profession and the power of their faith.

They cannot too often nor too folemnly repeat the question of their Lord, What do ye MORE than others? It is not enough for them to equal, they must excel, their neighbours. They have mercies, motives, means, peculiar to themselves. They have a living principle of righteousness in their own hearts; and, in their great Redeemer, they have, as the fountain of their fupply, all the fulness of the Godhead. It is but reasonable that much should be required of them to whom much is given. Let your whole perfons, O believers, be temples of God. Set your affections on things above, where Jefus Chrift fitteth at his right hand. Remember, that every one who hath the hope of feeing Jefus as he is, purifieth himfelf even as he is pure. Walk in love as he hath loved you. Let this amiable grace fhed her radiance over your character, and breathe her fweetnefs into your actions. Compel, by her charms, the homage of the profane. Cleave not to earth, becaufe your treafure is in heaven. Make use of it to exercise the benevolence of the golpel, to glorify your Father who is in heaven, to diffuse comfort and joy among the fuffering and difconfolate. To do good and to communicate, forget not: for with fuch facrifices God is well pleased. This evening prefents you with an opportunity of fhewing that faith worketh by love. The Society, on whofe account I address you, carry, in their very name, a reliftlefs appeal to the fentiments of men and of Christians. Devoting their labours to "the relief of the DESTITUTE SICK." they have fought out and fuccoured, not here and there a folitary individual; but fcores, and hundreds, and thousands of them that were ready to peri/h. Sickness, though softened by the aids of the healing art, by the fympathy of friends, and by every external accommodation, is no finall trial of patience and religion. But to be both sick and DESTITUTE is one of the bitterest draughts in the cup of human mifery. Far from me be the attempt. to harrow your feelings with images of fictitious woe. Recital must draw a vail over a large portion of the truth itself. I barely mention that the mafs of forrow which you are called to alleviate, appears in as many forms as there are affinities among men.

Is there in this affembly a father, the fons of whole youth are the flay of his age, and the hope of his family? In yonder cell lies a man of gray hairs, crufhed by poverty, and tortured by difeafe. His children are fcattered abroad, or have long fince defcended into the tomb. The found of "Father," never falutes his ears: He is a ftranger in his own country: His only companions are want and anguish.

Is there here a wife of youth encircled with domeftic joys? or is there one whole heart, though folaced with a thoufand outward bleffings, calls back the aching remembrance of the loved relation? Behold that daughter of grief. The fever rankles in her veins. She has no partner, dearer than her own foul, on whole bofom fhe may-tecline her throbbing head. Her name is Widow. Defolate, forfaken, helplefs, fhe is ftretched on the ground. The wintry blaft howls through her habitation, and famine keeps the door.

Is there a mother here, whole eyes fill in the tendernels of blifs, while health paints the cheeks of her little offspring, and they play around her in all the gaiety of infantine fimplicity ? I plead for a mother, the toil of whole hands was the bread of her children. The bed of languifhing deftroys her ftrength and their fuftenance. "The fon of her "womb" turns pale in her feeble arms; her heart is wrung with double anguifh, while, unconfcious of the fource of his pain, he cries for bread, and there is none to give it.

Is there here a man of public fpirit who exults in the return of Plenty and of Peace? Let him think of those who fuffer under the stern arrest of hunger and diseafe. Ah! let him think, that this wretcheduces belongs to the wife and family of the foldier who has fought the battles of his country. The meffenger of peace arrives: The murmur of the crowd fwells into extafy: Their fhout echoes through the hills. She raifes her drooping head, and hears, not that her friend and helper is at hand, but that herfelf is a widow, and her children father, lefs. The blood of her hufband and of their father has flowed for the common fafety—He fhall never return.

Is there a Christian here, who knows how to da good unto all, but effectively to them that are of the household of faith? Among these afflicted who are finking under their infimities, and have not where to lay their heads, are fome to whom the celeftials minister, and who are fellow keirs with Christ in glory. I state the facts: I use no arguments: I leave the result with your conficiences, your hearts, and your God.

APPENDIX.

THE perfons at whole request the foregoing Sermon is published, being fome of them members of the SOCIETY FOR THE RELIEF OF THE DESTI-TUTE SICK, and all of them friendly to its object, deem it their duty to lay before the reader a short account of its origin and progress.

This inflitution was formed in the year 1785, for the fpecial purpole of relieving those who are disabled by fickness from following the occupations by which they provide for themselves and their families—who are without friends to lupport them—and who have no acknowledged claim on any public charity.

The bufinels of the Society is conducted by bit immittee of twelve, who are annually choicn, and who meet once a week. It is an eftablished rule, that, previoufly to granting any fupply, a fub-contractive of two, on which all the members of the general Committee, are point of the weekly rotation, wifit the applicants perforally, inquire into their is unition, affift them in the mean time if proper objects, and give in their report at the next meeting of the Committee, when it is determined who fhall be put on the lift for weekly fupply, and what fhall be their allowance. To prevent abufe or confusion, each of the twelve members of the Committee has particular bounds affigned to him, within which he muft perforally wifit the Society's penfioners at leaft once a week; give them their pittance; and make fuch inquiry into their condition, as fhall enable the Committee to judge at the fubfequent meeting whether the charity fhould be continued or withdrawn.

Contributors, withing to be fatisfied as to the application of their money, may have full information by calling at the Society-Hall, Warriston's Clofe --where regular accounts of all transactions are kept; and where the Books are always open for infpection.

From the commencement of the Society to November 1800, being a period of fifteen years and about three months, they have diffributed $\pounds_{3460:1:5\frac{1}{2}}$ among 7234 families, confifting of 16,679 perfons. And during the laft twelve months, they have diffributed $\pounds_{319:19:6}$ among 719 families, confifting of 1787 perfons, many of whom, it is to be prefumed, have been prevented from experiencing all the wretchedges infeparable from united penury and lickness.
