INTRODUCTION.

THE Mpongwe is a dialect of Western Africa, spoken on both sides of the Gaboon river, at Cape Lopez, Cape St. Catherine, and in the interior, to the distance of two or three hundred miles. It belongs to one general family of languages which prevails over the whole of the southern half of the African Continent. It is less or more nearly allied to all the dialects along what may be called the Western Coast of Southern Africa, to the Bechuana, Kafir, Zulu, and other dialects of South Africa, and to the languages of Mosambique and Zanzibar on the Eastern Coast, but has no known affinities to any of the languages north of the Mountains of the Moon. The different members of this great family of languages vary materially as dialects, but they all retain enough of their original characteristics, to remove all doubt as to their common origin. A variety of causes have operated to produce differences among the dialects of this one great family of languages, among which may be mentioned, the want of written standards, the remote regions of country in which the different tribes reside, their diversified employments and pursuits, the want of extensive governments, and especially, the various foreign nations with whom they have had commercial intercourse for a long period, and from whom they must necessarily have borrowed many words.

Those along the Western Coast have borrowed largely from the Portuguese, those near the Cape of Good Hope from the Dutch and English, those of Mosambique from the Portuguese and Madagascar, whilst those higher up the coast have drawn quite as freely from the Arabic.

Notwithstanding these accessions of foreign words, however, the different dialects retain their original words and grammatical principles without material modification, and show more affinity for each other, than could be expected of barbarous tribes living so far apart and having no intercourse.

Nothing, perhaps, has contributed more to keep up these general resemblances, than the peculiar character and structure of the languages themselves.

Their general structure is marked by so much regularity, by so much exactness and precision, and with so much order and philosophical arrangement, that it would require a long period, as well as important changes in the outward condition of the people, to effect any material change in the leading characteristics of their language.

Of these various dialects, none are more nearly allied than the Mpongwe on the Western Coast and the Sowhylee or Swahere on the Eastern Coast, of very nearly the same parallel of latitude. The following are a few of the verbal resemblances that may be pointed out between the Mpongwe and Swahere.

ENGLISH,	MPONGWE,	SWAHERE.
Earth,	intye,	intye.
Farm,	kompindi,	kupanda.
Face,	ozyo,	ozo.
Tongue,	olēmē,	olimi.
Eyes,	antya,	matyo.
Teeth,	anā,	mano.
Shoulder,	ivēga,	bēga.
Dog,	mboa,	mboa.
Pig,	ngowa,	nguluwe.
Goat,	mboni,	mbozi.
Monkey,	nkēma,	kima.
Bee,	nyowe,	nyuke.
Doctor,	oganga,	mganga.
White beads,	ozyange,	oshanga.
To-day,	lēlā,	lēā.
One,	māri,	māja.
Two,	mbani,	mbiri.
Three,	taro,	tatu.
Four,	nai,	ne or ine.
Five,	tani,	tani.
Eight,	nanai,	nani.
All,	yodu,	yote.
Bad,	mbe,	bebai.
I,	mie,	mie.
He,	yē,	yēye.
Who,	mande,	nane.
To roast,	ko-pika,	ko-pika.
To fall,	kwa,	kwanguka.
To pay,	pē,	nipē.
To go,	kēnda,	nēnda.
To leave,	tiga,	wiga.
To speak,	kamba,	kwambie.
To send,	toma,	tuma.
Sleep,	nana,	lala.

If the comparison included other dialects on the Western Coast, in the vicinity of the Gaboon, it would appear that more than one-fourth of the words of Swahere were either the same or very nearly the same as those of these dialects.

Similar affinities may be traced, but not to the same extent, between the Mpongwe and the dialects of South Africa and Mosambique, as may be seen from the following specimens.

ENGLISH,	MPONGWE,	BECHUANA,	KAFIR,	MOSAMBIQUE.
Salutation,	bolo,	boro,	bulisa.
Antelope,	nkambi,	khama,
Father,	rera,	rare,	yise.
Rain,	moula (Bat'dia'),	pula,	mvula.
Child,	onwana,	kwanage,	unyana.
Behold,	vona,		bona.
Arise,	nōngwa,		tōngeni.
To him,	ko-yē,		kuyē.
Come from,	vila,		vela.
All,	yodu,		yoke.
With him,	n'ayē,		nayē.
Hunt,	buta,		buze.
My child,	onwana wam,		nyana wam.
To fall,	poswa,		poswa.
To teach,	nēnja,		nēnza.
Love ye,	rōndani,		tandani.
To do,	janja,		jenjalona.
Thing,	eza,		izinto.
Enter,	jingina,		gina.
Three,	taro,	t'harro and bararro,	atatu,	batatu.
Ten,	igomi,	sjume,	sumi,	kumi.
Tooth,	anā,	meno,		meno.
Pig,	ngoa,		ngu,	gurue.
Man,	mtu (Bat dial'),		mtu,	muntu.
Water,	majim (Panwe),		mazi,	madji.

The grammatical structure of these various dialects show equally as much affinity as their verbal resemblance, and is characterized by so many striking peculiarities that no doubt is left of the identity of their origin.

Between this great family of languages however and those spoken by the the negro races north of the Mountains of the Moon, there are not the most distant affinities. Indeed it is almost impossible to conceive how they could be more unlike. Those in Northern Africa, generally, are characterized by an excessive number of harsh, inarticulate nasal and guttural sounds, by a very limited number of inflections, by a want of precision in the expression of ideas, the want of arrangement in their grammatical principles, and with a very limited power of expansion; whilst those South, if the Mpongwe dialect may be taken as a specimen, are characterized by just the reverse. How an uncultivated people, like those of the Gaboon, could have come in possession of a language so beautiful and so philosophical in all of its arrangements, is a question which cannot easily be answered. The tribe by whom it is spoken, though elevated considerably above most of the tribes of Africa, cannot at most be regarded in any other light than a semi-civilized people.

The language, until within a few years past, has never been written; the people have no idea of the power of letters, and yet all the complicated principles of their grammar have been preserved with unvarying uniformity. They have no traditionary stories from which it could be inferred, that they had descended from a people of greater cultivation. For more than two centuries they have been engaged in commerce, acting as factors between interior tribes and European vessels. In the prosecution of their business, they discover a great deal of shrewdness, and cannot easily be over-reached either by white men or their own people. They possess a great deal of vivacity of disposition and are imaginative beyond any people we have ever known; and although they have no written literature, they have a great deal in the form of proverbial sayings, fables, and traditionary stories, and it is common for them to spend most of their leisure hours in rehearsing and listening to these fables and stories. They have generally a good deal of mental activity, and some of them show an astonishing amount of correct knowledge on all subjects, which come within the reach of their observation.

Whether the disposition and habits of the people have been moulded by the character of the language, or the language on the other hand, has been adjusted to suit the character of the people, cannot easily be determined. At present, and for centuries past, no doubt, they have exerted a reciprocal influence upon each other. And this is not more characteristic of this particular people than it is of all other tribes of the country.

ORTHOGRAPHY.

1. THE vowel sounds which occur in this language are a sounded as a in far, â as a in water, e as a in hate, ê as e in met, i as i in machine, î as i in pin, tin, &c., o as o in note, ô as o in not, u as oo in moon.

2. These sounds fluctuate materially, and sometimes run into each other. The sound of a varies considerably, but is never so long as a in father, except in the word agnandi, grief, and never so short as a in hat, except in the word gnandi, jealousy; the object of the use of these extreme sounds of the same letter in these two cases, being to make a distinction between two words, whose orthography would otherwise be very nearly the same. The sound of â and ô are not always distinguishable, except where they occur in juxtaposition, as in the word îlôngâ, country; and so e and î frequently run into each other; e and ê final, cannot always be distinguished, except some grammatical principle is indicated by the use of the one or the other.

3. The simple vowels a and i, before the letter n or l, have something of the nasal sound, and may be heard in the words, anlaga, inle, sunginla, &c. which are not pronounced an-laga, in-le and sungin-la, but as if a and i run into or were followed by the mixed sound of n and l.

4. Diphthongs.—These are ai, sounded as i in pine, au as ow in how, now, &c. and iu as u in pure. Au occurs but seldom, and when final has an indistinct or nasal sound, as if followed by an obscure n or m. It is found in the word osaun, thing, which is variously written by those who have studied this language, osaun, osau, osaunh, osaum, and even osam. U, when preceded by j or y, as in the words njuke and yuwi, has the sound of the diphthong iu.

5. Consonants.—The simple consonant sounds are b, d, f, g (always hard), h (but never except in the combination sh), j, k, l, m, n, p, r, s, t, v, w, y, z; each of which has a clear, well-defined sound of its own. The following are consonant combinations of frequent occurrence, both at the beginning and in the middle of words, viz. mb, as in the word mboni, goat; mp, as in mpolu, large; mw, as in mwëra, to scratch; nd, as in ndondo, high; nj, as in njônga, a man's name; nk, as in nkala, town; nt, as in ntono, the breast ; nty, as in ntyàni, shame ; ny, as in nyàla new ; ngw, as in ngwě, mother ; nw, as in onwana, or nwa, child ; gn, as gnandi and a-gnandi ; gw, in gwi, where ; fw, and vw, as in fwemi, to err ; and wwela, call ; zy, as in zyele, is not ; sh, as in the words ishàlà, care ; and shi, it ; though by the generality of persons these words are pronounced is-àlà, and si. M, at the beginning of a word is followed only by b and p, and in one single case by w. N is followed by d, g, j, k, l, t, w, y, ty and gw, but never by b, or p. Both of these classes of words are pronounced as if the m or n was preceded by a half vowel or sheva. When a or i is prefixed to such words to form the plural number, the initial m or n unites with the prefix vowel and forms a separate syllable ; thus, mpogo, mouse, in the plural becomes im-pogo or sim-pogo and not i-mpogo. Nd seldom occurs at the beginning of a word, except in a few monosyllables, as ndě, ndà, &c. Nk, when preceded by i, is pronounced as if g interposed, thus inkala is not pronounced i-nkala nor in-kala, but ing-kala. Nw is not separated in consequence of being preceded by o or a ; thus onwana is not pronounced on-wana but o-nwana. Ngw, in the middle of a word, usually doubles the g, thus ingwě is not pronounced in-gwě, but ing-gwě, and the same may be said of ng in the middle of a word ; thus bônga is pronounced bông-ga, though this and similar words are written with a single g. Ny, at the beginning of words, is common to all the dialects of north and south Africa, but is not easily explained ; before u it is pronounced (i. e. nyu) like new in news, and neu in neuter. Ty is pronounced like ch in chair. Nty, when preceded by i or a, the n unites with the prefix vowel, and forms one syllable, whilst ty forms the beginning of another. Gn, at the beginning of a word, is difficult of pronunciation, but almost the only one that is really so in the language. There is an intermediate sound between v and w, that is usually, but not accurately represented by fw or vw ; indeed, it seems to partake in some measure of the three letters f, v, w, but is not one or the other. Nl, in the middle of a word, is designed to indicate a nasal sound of the vowel by which it is preceded (see Sec. 3). This same mixed consonant sound also occurs at the commencement of a few monosyllabic words, as in the prepositions ne, na, nla, &c. There is also an intermediate sound between m and w, as in the word omanda or owanda, day time ; but it is usually written with one or the other of these letters.

6. Two vowels seldom come together in the Mpongwe language, except i and a, in such words as mbia, good, bendia, to cause to be angry, &c. and in such words as wao, sao, mao,

&c. When one word ends in, and the succeeding one commences with a vowel, one of three things takes place, 1st, a consonant must be interposed, thus ayoni sinyare, instead of ayoni inyare; or, 2d, one of the vowels must fall away, thus n'ayē, by him, is used for na ayē or ne aye; or, 3d, the two vowels coalesce and form a new sound, thus kē, ayē becomes k'āyē; and so oma ombe, bad person, becomes omā 'mbe; onwa or onwana ombe, a bad child, becomes onwā 'mbe: ne be tōnda e, becomes ne be tōndē. According to the same rules of contraction and coalescence, other changes still more remarkable occur; thus, ndego yazyo, our friend, becomes, ndeg'wazyo,* &c. &c.

ETYMOLOGY.

7. The parts of speech in the Mpongwe are, nouns, pronouns, adjectives, verbs, adverbs, prepositions, conjunctions, and interjections.

8. Article.—The Mpongwe possesses no article, definite or indefinite. The want of an indefinite article, if supplied at all, is done by the use of the numeral for one; thus, mi jena omā mārī, I see one person, for a person. The want of a definite article is variously supplied, by the demonstrative adjective pronoun, by the definite pronoun, or by the copulative conjunction n', ne or ni. Thus, they say, onomi winā, this man, or onomi wānā, that man, for the man: and so, Dāgula y'onwana wi Songe, Dāgula the son of Songe, though the definite pronoun y', which is here translated the, forms a connecting link between the two nouns, and agrees with the first noun, as an adjective would with its proper substantive. The following sentence furnishes an illustration of the use of a copulative conjunction for the definite article, viz.: impānlā mesānā imbani, paths these two ni mārī yi kēnda gwigonu, ni mārī yi kēnda, &c., which might the one it leads above, the one it leads, &c.
 be rendered, “of these two paths, and one leads above, and one leads,” &c.

NOUNS.

9. Mpongwe nouns have number and classification, but neither gender nor case. The gender is formed by suffixing the word for male or female to the noun; thus, onwana w'onomi, a male child, for a boy; and so, onwana nyanto, a female child, for a girl. The accusative or objective case of nouns is always the same as the nominative.*

* The contractions, elisions and coalescences which occur in the Mpongwe, frequently change a whole clause of a sentence to a single word; thus, the phrase, ayē re oma ompolu, he is a great person, is reduced to arompolu.

The possessive case is formed by interposing the definite pronoun between the nouns, but in the reverse order from that practised in the dialects of northern Africa; iwanga ny'Anyambia, i. e., the law it of God, for God's law; and so, ampanga m'Anyambia, i. e., laws they of God, for God's laws—in both of which cases, the definite pronouns ny' and m' agree with the nouns by which they are preceded, and not with those by which they are followed, and with which they are incorporated.

NUMBER AND CLASSIFICATION OF NOUNS.

10. All Mpongwe nouns may be arranged into four classes (which, for the sake of convenience, will be denominated declensions, though this is not strictly a philosophical use of the term), each one of which has a peculiar mode of its own of deriving the plural from the singular number. This classification of nouns, which forms a striking feature in the language, is rendered still more prominent, by the manner in which the adjectives and definite pronouns are inflected to accommodate themselves to them severally.

FIRST DECLENSION.

11. This declension embraces all those nouns which commence with one or more consonants and form their plurals by prefixing i or si; thus,

	SINGULAR.	PLURAL.
Cow,	nyare ,	inyare or sinyare , cows.
Knife,	swaka ,	iswaka or siswaka , knives.
Basket,	tondo ,	itondo or sitondo , baskets.

NOTE.—Verbal or derivative nouns, which commence with the initial i, have no singular forms, and are therefore to be arranged under the head of plural nouns of the first declension. To this class, belong such nouns as, inumba, hatred: ibenda, anger; itönda, love, &c. &c.

* This does not hold in relation to personal and definite pronouns (which see).

SECOND DECLENSION.

12. This declension embraces only those nouns which have e for their initial letter; and they derive their plurals simply by dropping this letter, thus :

	SINGULAR.	PLURAL.
Chest,	egara,	gara, chests.
Tree,	erere,	rere, trees.

NOTE.—If the first consonant of the word be z, in forming the plural, not only is the initial e dropped, but z is invariably changed into y; thus,

	SINGULAR.	PLURAL.
Book,	ezango,	yango, books.
Thing,	ezâma,	yâma, things.
“	eza,	ya, things.
Broom,	ezâmbâlâ,	yâmbâlâ, brooms.

THIRD DECLENSION.

13. Under this head are included all those nouns which have i for their initial letter (verbal or derivative nouns excepted), and form their plurals by changing i into a, thus :

	SINGULAR.	PLURAL.
Sheep,	idâmbe,	adâmbe, sheep.
Duck,	izâge,	azâge, ducks.

NOTE.—1. If the second letter or first consonant be v, not only is the initial i changed into a, but v is changed into mp, thus :

	SINGULAR.	PLURAL.
Law,	ivanga,	ampanga, laws.
Wing,	ivava,	ampava, wings.

NOTE.—2. To the plural number of this declension, belong all those nouns which have but one number; they are such, generally, as the names of liquids, as aningo, water; alugu, rum; agali, oil, &c.

FOURTH DECLENSION.

14. This declension comprises all those nouns which have o for their initial letter; and they form their plurals, 1st, by changing o into i, or, 2d, by changing o into a; thus,

	SINGULAR.	PLURAL.
Nut,	olonda,	ilonda, nuts.
River,	olâvi,	ilâvi, rivers.
Man,	onomi,	anomi, men.
Child,	onwana,	anwana, children.
Arm,	ogâ,	agâ, arms.

NOTE.—If the first consonant is w, in forming the plural, the w is either changed into m or into b; thus,

	SINGULAR.	PLURAL.
Ship,	owatanga,	amatanga.
Canoe,	owaro,	amaro.
Feather,	owowa,	ibowa.

15. There are several irregularities under this declension: thus, anlaga, people, is the plural of oma, person; anto, women, in the singular, is omanto or onwanto, the first of which means a female person, and the second a female child. Owëmbâ or wëmbâ, soup, belongs to this declension, but is irregular.

16. Those nouns which terminate with a, when followed by a word that commences with y or w, change a into i; thus, swaki yam, my knife, and not swaka yam; and so, ilambi wam, my cloths, and not ilamba wam. Another change on the final syllable takes place, when o is followed by y; thus, ndeg' wazyo, our friend, instead of ndego yazyo. Both of these changes are made for the sake of euphony.

VERBAL NOUNS.

17. There are three kinds of nouns which may be derived from verbs. 1st. Abstract nouns, generally, are derived from the present of the indicative, by simply prefixing i; thus, from tönda, to love, comes itonda, love; from benda, to be angry, comes ibenda, anger. This class of nouns belong to the plural number of the first declension, and not to the singular number of the third, or the plural of the fourth declension, as may be inferred from the particular form of the adjective which it invariably takes. 2d. Nouns of agency are formed by prefixing o, instead of i, to the present of the indicative, and by changing a into i; thus, noka, to lie; onoki, liar. In some instances, the noun of agency is formed by prefixing e, and by suffixing ni; thus, banda, to commit adultery, ebandani, an adulterer. The first of these belongs to the fourth, and the other to the second declension. 3d. Frequentative nouns are formed from the present of the indicative, by changing a final into i, and by suffixing ni; thus, noka, to lie; nokini, much or habitual lying.

18. There is another species of noun derived from the verb, but not much used, which may be denominated the Gerund. It is derived from the radical form of the verb, by prefixing n, by changing a final into i, and by suffixing ni; thus, from tōnda, to love, comes ntōndini, the pleasing, or the pleasure of. There may be as many gerunds as there are conjugations of the verb, but they are not frequently used.

ADJECTIVES.

19. The number of adjectives in the Mpongwe, is not very considerable; but somewhat more so than in most of the dialects of Western Africa. They have number, inflection and classification, but neither case, gender nor degrees of comparison.

20. The degrees of comparison are expressed, partly by circumlocution, and partly by the aid of the words viaganu, or posiu, both of which have the force of something like "excel," "more than," &c. The comparative degree is formed by employing one of these words when a comparison is to be instituted between two, or a definite number of objects, thus: swaki yam viaganu swaki yû; i. e., "my knife excels your knife." The superlative degree is expressed when an unlimited or indefinite number of objects are brought together; thus, swaki yam viaganu iswaki sodu; i. e., "my knife is better than all knives," or, is the best of knives. The idea of comparison is also expressed, but of course very indefinitely, by the emphasis that is laid upon the word; for example, when the word mpolu, great, is pretty strongly emphasized, it is understood that the object is greater than usual. When the emphasis requires the utmost stretch of the voice, the object is superlatively large. In this way, the comparative degrees of greatness, smallness, hardness, rapidity, and strength, &c., may be conveyed with more accuracy and precision than could readily be conceived.

21. Number and Inflection of Adjectives.—Every adjective has not only a singular and plural number, but each one is inflected to correspond with, or to accommodate itself to nouns of all the declensions; i. e. each adjective has a form, both singular and plural, for nouns of every declension. This singular feature in the language will be better understood by the following illustration ; thus :

1st Declension—	Singular, nyare yam , my cow.
“	Plural, inyare sam , my cows.
2d “	Singular, egara zam , my chest.
“	Plural, gara yam , my chests.
3d “	Singular, idâmbe nyam , my sheep.
“	Plural, adâmbe mam , my sheep.
4th “	Singular, otondo wam , my basket.
“	Plural, itondo yam , my baskets.

We find here, yam, sam, zam, nyam, mam, wam, &c., as the different forms into which the adjective is inflected in order to accommodate itself to the different classes or declensions of the nouns.

22. Classification of Adjectives.—Adjectives are arranged into two distinct classes, according to the different modes by which they are inflected through the various declensions. A third class may be formed of those that are indeclinable.

23. First Class.—Under this head, may be grouped all those adjectives and adjective pronouns, which depend upon the aid of the definite pronoun, to express their various numbers and declensions ; thus, 'am is the word for “my,” but is never used, unless it has the definite pronoun prefixed ; i. e. yi, si, zi, mi, &c., which unites with 'am, by dropping its own vowel ; thus, yi 'am (literally “it of me,” for, my or mine,) becomes yam, sam, zam, &c., according to the declension of the noun to which it belongs.

24. If the adjective commences with a consonant, or if it is a noun that is used as an adjective, the definite pronoun is simply prefixed, and the only inflection which takes place is that upon the prefix pronoun, the radical or original form of the word remaining unchanged ; thus, the word ngulu, strong, becomes yingulu, zingulu, nyingulu, mingulu, &c. The prefix pronoun may have for its vowel, i, a, or o ; but by what law it chooses between these, is not known. Under the first class of adjectives may be arranged all the possessive personal pronouns, as, yam, my ; yâ, your ; yě, his ; yazyo, our ; yani, your ; yao, their : the demonstrative adjective pronouns, as, yinâ, this ; yânâ, that ; and their compounds, meyinâ and meyânâ ; and various other adjectives, as, yonigi, sweet ; yinoni, bitter ; yingulu, strong ; yimpyu, hot ; yatenatena, red ; yapupu, white, &c. &c.

25. Second Class.—Adjectives of this class reject the definite pronoun altogether, and are inflected like so many nouns of the different declensions; that is, in the first declension, it has the form of a noun of this declension; in the second declension, like a noun of that declension, &c. This will be better understood by a table in which the changes are laid down; thus:

1st Declension—	Singular, nyare mpolu , a big cow.
“	Plural, inyare simpolu , large cows.
2d	Singular, egara evolu , a large chest.
“	Plural, gara volu , large chests.
3d	Singular, idâmbé ivolu , a large sheep.
“	Plural, adâmbé ampolu , large sheep.
4th	Singular, olâvi ompolu , a large river.
“	Plural, ilâvi impolu , large rivers.

26. The changes wrought upon the incipient consonant or combination of consonants, varies in different words. The mb, in the words mbia, good, and mbe, bad, undergoes the same changes in the second and third declensions that mp does; i. e., they become evia, ivia, eve, ive, &c. Mp, in the word mpe, short, is changed into p; thus, nyare mpe, a short cow; egara epe, a short chest, &c. Nd, in the word nda, long, is changed into l; thus, mpânîâ nda, a long path; in the second declension, we have egara ela, a long chest, &c. Ny, in the words nyenge, many, much, and nyango, small, is changed into z in the singular number, into y of the plural of the second declension, and into m in the plural of the third. These inflections, however, will be better understood by a careful examination of the table of nouns and adjectives; which see.

27. There are a few adjectives that are indeclinable, and of course, are used in connexion with nouns of all declensions, without any variation of their ground form. To this class belong the word nâmbé, black; nai, four, &c.; but they are not numerous. These, though few, may be denominated the third class of adjectives.

NUMERAL ADJECTIVES.

28. The manner of counting in this language, is strictly the decimal system. They count up to ten, when there is a reduplication: ten and one for eleven, ten and two for twelve, &c. Twenty are two tens, thirty are three tens; one hundred, for which they have a name, nkama, is ten tens. Beyond one hundred, they reduplicate, and make two hundred, three hundred, &c. They use the English word thousand, having no term for any higher number than one hundred.*

29. The following is a list of the numerals:—

1. mâri.
2. mbani, vani, ambani, &c.
3. tyaro, taro, araro, &c.
4. nai.
5. tyani, tani, atani, &c.
6. orowa or rowa.
7. orâgenu and râgenu.
8. nanai.
9. inâgomi.
10. igomi.
11. igomi ni mâri (ten and one).
12. igomi ni mbani (ten and two).
20. agomi mbani (two tens).
30. agomi nytaro (three tens).
100. nkama.
200. inkama mbani (two hundreds).
1000. inkama igomi (ten hundreds).

30. The numerals, according to their orthographical structure, belong to the first, second, or third (indeclinable) classes of adjectives; orowa, orâgenu, inâgomi, and igomi, commencing, as they do, with vowels, belong to the first class, but are not generally inflected, except when they are used as ordinals, and except where the incipient vowel falls away for the sake of euphony. Mâri, nai, and nanai belong, for the most part (but not universally), to the third or indeclinable class. Mbani, tyaro, and tyani are of the second class of adjectives; and hence we have from mbani, vani, avani, &c.; and from tyaro, taro, araro, &c.; and from tyani, tani, atani, &c.

31. The ordinal numbers are derived from the cardinal, by simply prefixing to the latter the definite pronoun of the noun to which it belongs. If the cardinal number commences with a vowel, the definite pronoun drops its own vowel, and incorporates itself with the numeral; but if it commences with a consonant, the definite pronoun retains its vowel, and is simply prefixed, choosing, however, that vowel which will be most consonant to the laws of euphony. Thus we have, yimâri, first; yimbani, second; yintyaro, the third, &c. Each one of these ordinals has as many different forms as there are declensions; thus, we have, yimâri, zimâri, nyimâri, &c. For a more full illustration of these principles, see table of nouns and adjectives.

* The mode of counting in the different dialects of Africa is very variable. The Grebo counts to five, when there is a reduplication; to ten, when there is another; and to twenty, when there is a third. Huba is ten twenties, or two hundred. All these different modes of counting have arisen from the use of the fingers in enumeration.

32. The distributives are formed simply by a repetition of the cardinal numbers; thus, mâri-mâri, one by one; mbani-mbani, two by two, &c.

THE RELATIVE POSITION OF THE NOUN AND THE ADJECTIVE.

33. When there are not more than two adjectives belonging to the same noun, they always follow and stand in juxta-position to it; thus, nago mbia, a good house; impani yani mbe, fashions your bad; for, your bad fashions. If there are more than two adjectives, and especially if one of them is an adjective of quantity, it may be separated from its noun by several intervening words; hence we sometimes find the word yodu, all, at the end of a clause or sentence, whilst its noun stands at the beginning. When two or more adjectives, belonging to the same noun, are coupled to each other by a copulative conjunction, the relative position of the noun and its adjectives, are somewhat peculiar; thus, avieni go denda evia emâri na evilo evolu; for, he he came to do good one and work great;

came to do one great and good work.

34. Numeral adjectives also vary from the general rule as to their relative position to the noun. When the numeral is ten, or under that, it invariably conforms to the general rule, and stands next to the noun; thus, anlaga avani, two persons; inago tani, five houses, &c. When the number is more than ten, and less than one hundred, the word for ten or tens, goes before the noun, whilst the multiplicator follows and stands next, and the noun may or may not be repeated before the units, if there are any; if the noun is not repeated, the units are joined to the multiplicator by the copulative conjunction; thus, agomi m'imboni ambani ni nai; for twenty-four goats; or thus tens of goats two and four;
 (which is the most common phraseology), agomi m'imboni ambani n'imboni nai.
tens of goats two and goats four.

If the number exceeds one hundred, it is expressed thus:

Nkama y'imboni mâri n'agomi ambani ni nai;
 Hundred of goats one and tens two and four;

for one hundred and twenty four goats. Sometimes, the multiplier in the plural is used alone; thus, akànda ambani, for twenty plantains, the tens being implied by the plural form of the multiplier. In the preceding illustrations it will be perceived, that agomi and nkama assume the character of nouns, whilst the words m'imbongi and y'imbongi, by taking the definite pronouns which belong to agomi and nkama respectively, become nouns of the genitive case, and are governed as such.

GENERAL REMARKS.

35. The want of adjectives in this language, is supplied by the use of a noun and verb; sick, hungry, rich, ashamed, &c., are expressed by this means; thus, mi jàgà njana, I am sick with hunger, for, I am hungry; are ni sika, he is with money, or, there is money to him (like the Latin est mihi, there is to me, for, I have) for, he is rich; and so, e jena ntyàni; i. e., he sees shame; for, he is ashamed.

36. As the number of adjectives in the language is not considerable, it follows as a necessary consequence, that those which are used, have great latitude, without much precision of meaning. The word mbia, good, is the only word which they have to express the ideas of kind, liberal, merciful, just disinterested, affectionate, &c.; and mbe, bad, is used for unjust, cruel, avaricious, offensive, wicked, &c.; and so, elenge signifies a poor man, fool, stupid, &c.

PRONOUNS.

37. The Mpongwe is exceeding rich in pronouns; and, in this way, not only acquires great flexibility of character, but a degree of precision which but few languages possess. There are three kinds of pronouns, the Personal, Relative and Definite. Possessive pronouns, indefinite and demonstrative adjective pronouns, have been included under the general head of adjectives; which see.

PERSONAL PRONOUNS.

38. Personal pronouns have no gender, but they have number, a variety of forms, and, so far as the objective case differs from the nominative, they may be said to possess case. They admit of no classification corresponding with what is denominated declension, under the heads of nouns and adjectives. There are three of them, each of which has several forms for the singular, a plural, and what may be denominated an emphatic form. The following table will exhibit fully all of the personal pronouns :

	SINGULAR.	PLURAL.	EMPHATIC.
1st person—	m' , mi and mie ,	azuwe ,	mië .
2d person—	o , â and oma ,	anuwe ,	awë or 'wë .
3d person—	e , ë , yë ,	wi , wu , wao and wa ,	ayë .

REMARKS.—1st. m' is a contracted form of mi or mie, and is seldom used, except when followed by b, with which it invariably unites itself. There is a real distinction between mi and mie; so much so, that the natives would feel it to be a material violation of the laws of grammar, to use one where the other ought to be used; but upon what grounds the distinction is made, unless for the sake of euphony, is not known. Mi and mië are both used in the objective case; mie is never used as an objective case.

2d. O is the ordinary word for the second person singular; when it follows the verb to which it is the nominative, and that verb ends in the vowel a, a coalescence takes place between the o and final a, and forms â; thus, instead of saying, tonda o ayë, you love him, it is invariably rendered tôndâ ayë. In the same way, it is incorporated with the verb, when it is the objective case, and is governed by the verb. 'Wë, which is a contraction of the emphatic form, is also used as an objective of the second person singular. Oma or owa, which signifies person, is also used for the second person singular in the nominative case, but not very frequently.

3d. There are three forms for the third person singular of the pronoun, viz. e, ë and yë; of these, e is the ordinary form; e following the verb to which it is either the object or subject, incorporates itself with the final syllable, as the case of the second person just mentioned, and becomes ë or yë; the latter, yë, is sometimes, though not frequently, used as a nominative; more commonly, it is used as an objective, and when thus used, it is to be regarded as a contraction of emphatic ayë. E, before a verb in the historical tense, commencing with a, always, in obedience to the laws of euphony, disappears; thus, they never say, e avangi.yâma yodu, but simply avangi yâma, &c.

4th. The plural forms are the same in the nominative and objective cases, except that when it follows a verb ending in a, the incipient a of the first and second persons disappears, and we have 'zuwe and 'nuwe. Azuwe is sometimes pronounced az'wë; but this is a contracted form. Wi, wa and wu are not properly personal pronouns, but definite pronouns used as such. Wao is the only form of the third person plural, and is the same in the nominative and objective cases.

5th. The forms of miě, awě and ayě are used when something emphatic is intended; awě and ayě are also used in connection with verbs in the past and historical tenses, in which case the verb uniformly drops its prefix a. When these two words occur in the objective, they are always of the contracted forms, 'wě or 'yě.

6th. The third person singular, viz. e, when it refers to some object present, and no antecedent is expressed, is applied indiscriminately to objects of the male, female and neuter genders, whether those objects be of the human species, of brutes, or inanimate objects. If the antecedent is expressed, then the definite pronoun (of which we shall presently speak) is used in all cases, except when some person or the Deity is alluded to. Wao is never used, except in connection with human beings.

7th. The reflective pronouns are formed by suffixing mě to the emphatic forms and the plural numbers; thus, miēmě, myself; awēmě, yourself; ayēmě, himself; azuwēmě, ourselves; anuwēmě, yourselves; and waomě, themselves.

8th. The relative position of the personal pronoun and the verb is variable. When it is the subject of the verb, it must always be in juxta-position with it; but may be before or after the verb. When it goes before the verb, it sometimes disappears, for the sake of euphony (see note 3, above); sometimes it incorporates itself with the initial vowel of the verb, but, in most cases, stands unconnected with the verb. When it follows the verb, it may be incorporated with it or stand alone, according to circumstances.

If there are two pronouns in the same clause, the one of which is the nominative, and the other the objective of the verb, there will be two modes of construction, according to the position of the nominative; if it goes before the verb, then the objective case follows, and is either incorporated with or stands in juxta-position to the verb by which it is governed; if, on the contrary, the pronoun nominative follows the verb, it must stand between it and the objective case; thus, anuwe lendi wao nânâ, ye did thus; or thus, which is the more common construction, ne be denda 'nuwe wao nânâ; i. e. and did you them thus. For a more full illustration of these principles, see specimens of Mpongwe, with an interlineation of English, at the end of the Grammar.

RELATIVE PRONOUNS.

38. The relative pronoun for who is o, when no question is asked. It can be distinguished from the second person singular only by its relative position in a sentence; i. e. by coming between its antecedent and the verb; thus, oma o denda yânda, the person who did this. The plural of o is, wi or wa (if these be not the definite pronoun);* thus, môngi wi denda nânda, the people who did so. The definite pronouns are also used as relative pronouns, irrespective of the character of the antecedent; i. e. whether the relative refers to persons or things; thus, ra yazyo yi re g'orowa; i. e. our Father who is in heaven,† &c.

39. The interrogative relative pronouns are, mande, who; omande, what person; and ande and sě, what; osaun nde, what for; and the compound ez'ande, what thing (compounded of eza, thing, and ande, what). Mande is rendered plural by having wa prefixed; thus, anlaga wamande? what people? Zye is sometimes used in the sense of what, in connection with a noun; thus, egombe zye? what time? Oma joined to the word 'edu, any, which, &c., omedu becomes whosoever, any one, &c. The pronoun (definite) yi, in connection with the auxiliary re, is often used in the sense of that, which; thus, ndaga yi re, the affair which, &c. &c.

40. The demonstrative pronouns are, yina, this; plural, sinda, these, and yânda, that; plural, sânda, those; and their compounds meyina, mesina, meyânda and mesânda; all of which are treated of more fully under the head of adjectives.

DEFINITE PRONOUNS.

41. We come now to treat of one part of speech which belongs to this language, and its kindred dialects, and is perhaps entirely unknown to the dialects of the northern portion of the African continent. It is denominated the definite pronoun, but not with philosophical accuracy. It is intimately interwoven with the entire structure of the language, and is used for such a variety of purposes, that it is difficult to assign it a place under any of the established divisions of speech. It partakes of the nature of a personal pronoun, and is often used as such; it performs

* It is not possible to determine whether wi and wa be the plural of o, or whether they be definite pronouns used as relatives.

† We cannot class what we call definite pronouns, under the head of relatives; for, though they are used as such, this is by no means the principal or only office which they perform.

the office of a relative pronoun; and, in such cases, identifies the antecedent with admirable precision; it serves as a connecting link between two nouns, when one of them is in the possessive case; they perform the office of a demonstrative pronoun; they incorporate themselves with all verbs which have a vowel for their incipient syllable; they serve as an auxiliary in forming the infinitive mood; sometimes they perform the functions of a preposition; they incorporate themselves with, and are indispensable to the inflections of the great mass of adjectives in the language,* &c. &c.

42. There are four of these pronouns, corresponding with the four declensions of nouns; but each one of which has three forms, both for the singular and plural numbers, according as they take the vowels a, i or o. This will be better understood by the following table:

	SINGULAR.	PLURAL.
1st Declension,	yi, ya, yo,	si, sa, so.
2d “	zi, za, zo,	yi, ya, yo.
3d “	nyi, nya, nyo,	mi, ma, mo.
4th “	wi, wa, wo,	yi, ya, yo.

EXPLANATIONS.—When the definite pronoun is the nominative to a verb of the present tense, which almost invariably commences with a consonant, it takes i for its vowel; and so it takes the same vowel when it acts as an auxiliary to the infinitive mood. In all cases, when the word which follows it, commences with a vowel, it is impossible to tell what vowel properly belongs to it, for it invariably drops its vowel, and incorporates itself with the following word. Thus, in the phrase, mōngi w'alendi yinà, the people who did this, we cannot tell what vowel belonged to w', inasmuch as it is rejected for the sake of incorporation. The definite pronoun is never found in the objective case with i. When it acts as a connecting link between nouns, the latter of which commences with a consonant, it invariably takes a; thus, onwana wa Jems, i. e. the child it of James. When it is prefixed to an adjective commencing with a consonant, it sometimes takes a,

* The following examples will illustrate the varied use of this anomalous particle: 1st. As a personal pronoun, nyare yi nya orove, the cow it eats grass; 2d. As a relative pronoun, rere yazyo yi re g'orowa, our Father who is in heaven; 3d. As a connecting link between two nouns, onwana w'Angila, the child it of Angila; 4th. As a demonstrative pronoun, Abambo mo denda yenà, the devils who (the very ones) do so; 5th. Incorporated with verbs, thus, mongi w'ayuwu, the people who died.

sometimes i, and, more frequently, o; we have this exemplified in the three following words: yingulu, strong; yatenatena, red; and yonigi, sweet. When it is in the objective case, it invariably takes o; it takes o in the nominative only when something very definite or special is intended; thus, mōngi, wo denda, the people who (i. e. the very people) did thus, &c. &c.

43. The definite pronoun is never used without an antecedent. As a nominative, it invariably stands before the verb, and next to it. Its antecedent may stand before it, or may be separated by several intervening words; the antecedent can always be identified by being of the same number and declension of the definite pronoun. When the definite pronoun is in the objective case, and is governed by the verb, it ordinarily stands next to it.

ADVERBS, PREPOSITIONS AND CONJUNCTIONS.

44. These three parts of speech are grouped under one head, because there are a large number of particles in the language, which are indiscriminately used in the three-fold character of adverbs, prepositions and conjunctions. The particles go and ne are examples of this. The former is not only used as a preposition, conjunction and adverb, but as an auxiliary to the infinitive—its meaning in any particular place being determined by its relative position in the sentence. When it precedes a verb which commences with a, and there is a pronoun coming between them, it not only incorporates the pronoun with itself, but, in this compound character, it incorporates itself with the verb; thus, instead of the phrase, go e avieni, when he came, they say, gw'avieni.

The particle ne, na, ni, or nle, nla, nli (it is pronounced in all these ways) is likewise used in this three-fold character. When it accompanies the verb of existence (as in the Latin phrase, est mihi, I have), it gives it the idea of possession; thus, are na swaka, literally, he is with a knife, for he has a knife. Suffixed to a neuter verb, it forms a distinct conjugation, and gives it an active signification; thus, e bendina mie, he is angry at or with me. Used as a copulative conjunction, or as a preposition signifying with, it expresses the idea of accession in either case, and it matters very little whether it be called a preposition or conjunction; thus, the phrase, nkombe, n'ogwēli, n'igē-gēni, may be translated, either the sun, and the moon, and the stars, or the sun, with the moon, with the stars. Nor is there any essential difference between these two words, in the great majority of cases, in the English language, though we are accustomed to call one a preposition and the other a conjunction. Notwithstanding this circumstance, however, it will be necessary to offer a few remarks on each one of these parts of speech separately.

PREPOSITIONS.

45. The number of prepositions in the language is not large, but those which are used have great latitude of meaning. Sometimes the same word, in two different places, have meanings directly opposite to each other. Thus, go, in one connexion, signifies from, as mi pila go Mbenga, I am from Benga; and in another, it has the signification of to, as mi kënda go Mbenga, I am going to Benga. Before persons, it is changed into gore, as aromi mie gore 'wë, i. e. he sent me to you. If it goes before a noun or verb commencing with a vowel, it invariably incorporates itself with it, according to the general principles of contraction and coalescence.

The next most common preposition is ni, na or ne, which also incorporates itself with the noun it governs, provided the noun commences with a vowel. It has much latitude of meaning, and signifies in, with, by, for, &c. Và, in, in the space of, &c. is also much used, but especially in connexion with nouns of time. Nd, which is used only in conjunction with the second and third persons singular of the personal pronoun, has the meaning of by, as ndë, by him, ndà, by you, &c. Pière and baraba, near, and a few others, are also used.

46. The deficiency in the number of prepositions, is made up chiefly by the use of nouns and verbs; for example, to express the idea of between, a noun is used which has the force of the middle or centre. They have no word for up and down, but these ideas are involved in the words banda, to go up, and sumina, to come down; i. e. they are equivalent to the English words descend and ascend.

47. Prepositions, in this language, invariably stand before, and next to the nouns which are governed by them; so that they are, with special propriety, denominated prepositions. In the Grebo, Mandingo, and perhaps all of the dialects of Northern Africa, the prepositions, with a few exceptions, follow the nouns which are governed by them.

CONJUNCTIONS.

48. There are words that are used both as copulative and disjunctive conjunctions, the most common of which are, ni, na, and; ge, genà and geni, and or nor, according to circumstances ; mbē, or ; kao, until, except, &c. ; ja, if, when ; kānde and kānde ne, because ; kambē and kambēnle, wherefore, that is to say ; inle, saying, to this effect, so that ; yenā and nānā, so, thus, after this fashion ; kā, so, and kē, too, &c. &c. These conjunctions are extensively used as auxiliaries to certain moods and tenses of the verb, without which, their meaning cannot be fully developed.

ADVERBS.

49. The following are the principal adverbs in use, viz : vēi, vēnā, gun and gunu, here ; vāvā and gogo, there ; gwi, where ; goboso, ahead ; of time : vāte vēnā, now ; pelē, this moment ; sunge, quick ; nēganēga, quickly ; nlēlā, to-day ; jau, yesterday ; mēlē, to-morrow ; jajangwi, presently, by and by ; ja, go or gw', when. Of quantity : polu, much, very much ; nyenge, many, &c. Of doubt : vendi and venditua, perhaps, possibly ; vangajēnē, perchance. Of negation : nyawe and nyavege, no. To these may be added, yenā, nānā, so, likewise ; vāre, kānle vā and fā, which participate also of the character of conjunctions. Some of the above words, both conjunctions and adverbs, are used in the character of nouns, yenā and nānā particularly ; e pa tōnda nānā, he does not like so, for he does not like that fashion. On the other hand, some of our adverbs can be expressed in this language, only by the use of a noun and an adjective ; thus, frequently, is expressed by egombe ezenge, many times : and egombe zodu, all times, for constantly.

INTERJECTIONS.

50. The Mpongwe, like most of the dialects of Africa, abounds in exclamations ; some of the more common are, emē (prolonged accent on the first syllable), to be sure, did you ever hear the like ! ngā, indeed ! is it true ! mōngeswēni, who ever heard the like ! ngwē yam, oh, my mother ! rēti, true ! giligili, true ! tangani ! oh ! white man. Besides which, there is a common practice of calling the mother by name, a habit that arose from feelings of affection in the first instance, but commonly used in a frivolous and irreverent manner. These exclamations of wonder and surprise are generally accompanied by very significant gesticulation, as striking the hands together, beating the thighs, and by varying the expression of the countenance, with a facility that civilized men can never equal.

VERBS.

51. The Mpongwe verb is the most remarkable part of the language. It is almost unrivalled for the variety and extent of its inflections, but is, nevertheless, perfectly methodical in all those inflections, and may be comprehended without difficulty.

REGULAR VERB.

52. All the verbs in this language, with the exception of eight or ten, are regular; i. e. they are inflected through all the moods, tenses, voices and conjugations, with unvarying uniformity. The characteristics of a regular verb are: 1st, that their incipient letter (in the radical or simplest form of the verb) must be a consonant; 2d, that they must be of two or more syllables; and 3d, they must always terminate in a.

The consonants with which a regular verb can commence, are, b, d, f, j, k, m, n, p, s, t, and sh, each one of which has its reciprocal consonant, into which it is invariably changed, in order to form the imperative mood, and certain past tenses of the indicative; thus, if the verb commences with b, in the present of the indicative, which may be considered the root or ground form, b must be changed into w to form the imperative; thus, mi bönga, I take; wönga, take thou.* If the word commence with d, then d is uniformly changed into l; thus, mi denda, I do; lenda, do thou; f is changed into v or w, j into y, k into g, p into v, s into z, t into r, sh into zy; m and n have no reciprocal letters; so that words commencing with these, are the same in the indicative and the imperative; in all other respects they are regular, and are therefore classed under the general head of regular verbs. The following table will illustrate these interchanges more fully; thus:

mi bönga , I take,	wönga , take thou.
mi denda , I do,	lenda , do thou.
mi felia , I call,	welia , call thou.
mi jona , I kill,	yona , kill thou.
mi kamba , I speak,	gamba , speak thou.
mi panga , I make,	vanga , make thou.

* In a very few cases, b is changed into v, instead of w; thus, from bela, to want, comes aveli, he wanted; and so, baga, to bring, is changed into vaga; but these are not frequent.

mi songa , I follow,	zonga , follow thou.
mi tōnda , I love,	rōnda , love thou.
mi sheva , I play,	zyeva , play thou.
mi mwēra , I scratch,	mwēra , scratch thou.
mi nunguna , I help,	nunguna , help thou.

The great mass of the regular verbs in the language, in their ground forms, are of two syllables; perhaps one-fifth of the whole are of three syllables; a still smaller number are of four, and only one verb in the language is known to have five syllables.

CONJUGATION OF THE VERB.

53. Having defined a regular verb, we may proceed a step further, and develop another feature quite as remarkable as the preceding. Every regular verb has a variety of derivative forms, not unlike what are called conjugations in Hebrew grammars; and, for the sake of convenience, we adopt this term. All of these conjugations are derived from the radical form of the verb, by changes on the final syllable, and by suffixes, but never by prefixes as in the Hebrew. These conjugations, of which there are ten or twelve, are simple or compound, and will be explained separately.

SIMPLE CONJUGATIONS.

54. Of these there are five; and, for the sake of convenience, we denominate the simplest form of the verb the Radical Conjugation. This expresses the simplest idea of the verb, without any contingent or accessory meaning, and corresponds with the Kal conjugation of the Hebrew; thus, mi tōnda, I love; mi kamba, I speak, &c.

55. The Frequentative or Habitual Conjugation.—This is derived from the radical, by suffixing ga; thus, tōndaga, to love habitually, or frequently, more generally the latter; and it is therefore denominated the frequentative conjugation. There are a few cases where it is used a little differently: jenaga has the force of looking about or around, instead of looking frequently or habitually. These exceptions, however, are not numerous.

56. The Causative Conjugation is derived from the radical, by changing a final into i, and by suffixing za; thus, tōnda, to love; tōndiza, to cause to love; kamba, to speak; kambiza, to cause to speak. In a few cases, this conjugation is made by changing a final into ia, instead of iza; thus, bendia, to cause to be angry, is equivalent to bendiza, and many verbs prefer that form of the causative. The force of this conjugation, as the name implies, is to cause an action. It gives neuter verbs an active signification; thus, from nana, to sleep, comes nani-za, to cause some one to sleep, and in this respect, corresponds with the Hiphil conjugation in Hebrew.*

57. The Relative Conjugation, which implies the performance of an action for, to or in behalf of some one, is formed from the radical, by changing a final into ina, or simply by suffixing na to the radical; thus, kamba, to speak; kambina or kambana, to speak to or for some one.

28. The Indefinite Conjugation, is thus denominated, inasmuch as it describes general or indefinite actions. It is formed by suffixing the imperative to the indicative, or what is substantially the same thing, by a repetition of the radical form, adopting the reciprocal consonant for the first letter of the second part of the word; thus, kamba, to speak, kambagamba, to speak at random, or without an object; and so, kēnda, to walk, becomes kēndagēnda, to walk about or for amusement.

59. These different conjugations are all exhibited at one view in the following table; thus:

- | | | |
|-------------------------|-----------------------|------------------------------|
| 1. Radical Conjugation— | kamba , | to speak. |
| 2. Frequentative | “ kambaga , | to speak habitually. |
| 3. Causative | “ kambiza , | to cause to speak. |
| 4. Relative | “ kambina , | to speak to or for some one. |
| 5. Indefinite | “ kambagamba , | to speak at random. |

60. There is another form of the verb, which is sometimes used, but as it cannot be inflected, like the above, through the different moods and tenses, it is not classed with them. It is formed by prefixing re to the radical, and imparts to the verb the sense of violent, energetic or very thorough action; thus, jena, to see, to look, &c. becomes jenare, which means to look thoroughly, to make thorough search, &c.

COMPOUND CONJUGATIONS.

61. By combining two or more of these simple conjugations we may form as many as six (perhaps more) compound conju-

* This form of the verb in Mpongwe, is not, either in form or signification, unlike to a Greek inflection, as in the word Πορίζω, to cause to drink. There are a few other verbal affinities between this and the Greek language, as the following:

ENGLISH	MPONGWE.	GREEK.
Open,	Nunguna,	Ανοίγω.
Angel,	Angila (man's name),	Άγγελος.
Many,	Mpolu or polu,	Πολύς.

These, however, may be accidental gations; thus, the frequentative and causative combined form kambizaga, to cause to speak frequently or habitually; the causative and relative united make kambinaza, to cause to speak in behalf of some one; the frequentative and relative combined make kambinaga, to speak to or for some one frequently; the frequentative and indefinite make kambagamba, i. e. to be in the habit of speaking at random; the causative and indefinite make kambagambiza, to cause to speak at random; by combining the relative and indefinite, we get kambagambina, to speak at random with some one. The compound conjugations are exhibited at one view in the following table; thus:

1. kambizaga, to cause to speak habitually.
2. kambinaza, to cause to speak for some one.
3. kambinaga, to speak for some one frequently.
4. kambagambaga, to speak at random frequently.
5. kambagambiza, to cause to speak at random.
6. kambagambina, to speak at random with some one.

62. Thus from this simple radical verb kamba, to speak, we have as many as four simple derivative, and six compound conjugations, each one of which not only has a clear well defined meaning of its own, but each one is inflected by the same rules and principles through all the moods, voices and tenses which belong to the verb. Every regular verb, therefore, may be inflected into several hundred different forms; and, if we add to these the numerous shades of meaning it acquires by the aid of auxiliary particles and the negative intonations, the extent of its flexibility is almost incredible.*

AFFIRMATIVE AND NEGATIVE FORMS OF THE VERB, ACTIVE AND PASSIVE VOICES.

63. The distinction between active or neuter, or transitive and intransitive verbs does not hold in connexion with Mpong-

* Some of the above conjugations are used more than the others, and those that are compounded less generally than those that are simple; and whilst every regular verb can be inflected through all these conjugations, moods, tenses, &c. it must not be supposed that every one is actually and frequently so inflected, for this would imply a versatility and activity of mind which uncultivated tribes are not supposed to possess. No native either, it is probable, would be able to trace one of these verbs consecutively through all its inflections, yet he could never mistake the precise import of any part of it that might be used in his hearing, and would always be able to use any tense or mood that the occasion might require. And it should be further noticed, that the people do not always adhere rigidly to the idiom of the language; thus, instead of saying, e pangizē jōnga, he caused him to drink, they would frequently say, e pangu yē e jōnga, i. e. he made him he drank.

we verbs; the same word may be neuter in one conjugation, and active in another, as may be seen by reference to what is said under the head of conjugations of verbs.

64. Every regular verb in the language, has not only an affirmative active and passive form, but a negative active and passive also. Any verb, whether affirmative or negative, in any conjugation, mood or tense, may be made passive by simply changing a into o, or by suffixing o when the word ends in i; tōnda, to love; tōndo, to be loved; arōndi, he loved; arōndio, he was loved; tōndiza, to cause to love; tōndizo, to cause to be loved, &c.

65. The negative form of the verb is distinguishable from the affirmative, both active and passive, by an intonation upon, or prolongation of, the radical vowel of the ground form;* thus, tōnda, to love; tōnda,† not to love; tōndo, to be loved; tōndo, not to be loved; tōndiza, to cause to love; tōndiza, not to cause to love, &c. This intonation accompanies the negative verb through all the moods and tenses, but with some variations, which it will be necessary to notice in another place.

MOODS.

66. Mpongwe verbs have five moods, viz: the indicative, imperative, subjunctive, potential, and the infinitive. Of these, the two first only have independent forms of their own. The parts of the other moods are made by uniting auxiliary particles (they may be conjunctions or auxiliary verbs) with certain forms of the verbs used in the indicative or imperative moods.

67. The indicative mood is the simplest part of the verb. It announces actions in their simplest sense, without any contingent or accessory meaning. All of its tenses, with the exception of the future, are made by inflections upon the radical form of the verb, and are entirely independent of the aid of any auxiliary particles.

67. The imperative is derived from the indicative, by changing the incipient letter into its reciprocal consonant; thus, kamba, to speak; gamba, speak thou; and jona, to kill; yona, kill thou. The sense of this mood is not confined simply to

* When there is an auxiliary particle, the intonation is generally shifted to the vowel of that.

† We use a Roman letter in this case, to indicate the intonation; but in ordinary writing an italic is used.

commanding, but to exhortation, encouragement, and in this way by the aid of an auxiliary particle ga, must, we have a form of it for the first and third person, both singular and plural, as well as for the second.

68. The subjunctive mood has no one form of the radical verb that is peculiar to itself; but by coupling auxiliary particles with the different forms of the tenses of the Indicative and the Imperative, it expresses ideas of contingency, condition, &c. The conjunctive particles that are used in connection with the tenses of this mood, are ja, if, when; kânle, if; kambênle, wherefore, that is to say, &c. The first of these, ja, is used in connection with the present tense, kânle with the past, and kambênle with the second member of a sentence, where something contingent or dependent on the preceding part of the sentence is implied.

69. The Potential Mood, which implies option as well as power, uses the particle kâ (which has the force of may, can and must), in the present tense; the particles tâ, atâ, and arâ, the precise force of which are not known, in connection with the past tenses. There is one form of the verb, viz, arôndi, cannot, must not, and will not love, which is peculiar to this mood.

70. The Infinitive Mood is nothing but the Indicative without a nominative, and having a preposition or definite pronoun before it; thus, yi tônda, to love, go kênda, to go, &c. &c.*

TENSE, NUMBER, AND PERSON OF VERBS.

71. Mpongwe verbs undergo no changes on account of persons, and with the exception of the second person of the imperative, they have none on account of number; i. e., the same form of the verb is used in all three persons and in both numbers; thus,

- | | | | | |
|-------------|-----------|-------------------|----------------------|-------------|
| 1st Person— | Singular, | mi kamba , | I speak. | |
| | “ | Plural, | azuwe kamba , | we speak. |
| 2d | “ | Singular, | o kamba , | you speak. |
| | “ | Plural, | anuwe kamba , | ye speak. |
| 3d | “ | Singular, | e kamba , | he speaks. |
| | “ | Plural, | wao kamba , | they speak: |

* There is one form of the verb, which, however, can scarcely be called a mood, much used in the language. In a sentence or clause where two verbs would be joined by a copulative conjunction, the conjunction is omitted, and the second verb takes the form of which we speak; thus, Anyambia aweli yê awulinia yê, i. e., God called him, and said to him. The same is used also in a superfluous sense: aweli Anyambia awelia yê, God called and called him. This latter mode is much used in historical narration.

The second person of the imperative has a plural which is made by affixing ni to the singular; thus, rōnda, love thou, rōndani, love ye; and by the same process in the negative, arōnda, do not love thou, arōndani, do not love ye.

72. Tenses.—There are five tenses in the Mpongwe. One present, three past, and one future. The indicative alone has the whole of these.

73. The present tense refers to something as existing or transpiring at the present time, and differs in nothing from what is called the present tense in English Grammars.

74. The immediate past tense is the next simplest form, and is derived from the present, simply by prefixing a; thus from tōnda, to love, comes atōnda, did love, or loved. This tense refers to something that has just been done, or something that has transpired some previous part of the same day. It includes the idea of the completeness of the action too, but has more special reference to the time of the action. In some cases where the preceding word ends in a vowel, and which, according to the laws of euphony, would require the disappearance of prefix a, it would appear that a present tense was used as an immediate past, which may be prevented in writing, by writing the tense with a mark of contraction before it; thus atōnda, in such circumstances, should be written 'tōnda.

This same form of the verb occurs in the present of the subjunctive, and can be distinguished from that only by wanting the conjunction ja, which always identifies the present of the subjunctive: thus, mi akamba, I spoke awhile ago, ja mi akamba, if I speak, or when I spoke.

75. The perfect past tense is derived from the immediate past tense, by changing a final into i, thus atōnda becomes atōndi. This tense has special reference to the completeness or incompleteness of an action, and none to time; thus when a man says mi akambi, I have spoken, he refers to what he has done, without including the idea of the time when the thing was done.

76. The indefinite past or historical tense, whilst it necessarily involves the idea of the completion or perfection of an action, has more special reference to time, and, generally, to events that have transpired sometime previous to to-day: it is derived from the preceding tense, by changing the first consonant into its reciprocal letter; thus, mi atōndi, I have loved, mi arōndi, I loved sometime ago; and mi akambi, I have spoken, mi agambi, I spoke sometime ago.*

* It is necessary to notice here, that the future tense, in historical writing, is much used for the past or historical tenses; thus, instead of saying, avangi Anyambia

77. The future tense refers to future time indefinitely, and involves the intention of the speaker at the same time. It is formed from the present tense by receiving before it the auxiliary particle be; thus, mi tōnda, I love, mi be tōnda, I will love. The precise force of the particle be is not known; it is never used except in connection with this tense, and might be regarded as an inseparable part of the verb, and be written thus, if it were not in one or two cases separated from it by another particle; thus, mi be fà bia, I am will to come again. The auxiliary, when preceded by mi, is frequently incorporated with it; thus, m'be is used for mi be. In the negative form of the verb, whether active or passive, the intonation which characterizes it, is shifted from the first vowel of the ground form to that of the auxiliary; thus, mi tōnda, I do not love, becomes mi be tōnda, I will not love.

For the future used as a historical tense, see note under Historical Tense.

The immediate past tense of the subjunctive mood is often used in the sense of a future indicative, and indeed is used as a future of the subjunctive.

78. Tenses of the Negative Verb. The negative form of the verb is uninflected in all the tenses of the indicative, with the exception of the future, where like the affirmative, it receives the auxiliary particle. The same form of the negative which is used in the present, is also used in all the past tenses, though in a few words it receives n as a prefix; thus, mi tōnda, I do not love, mi ntōnda, I never loved, I never did love, &c.

TENSES OF THE IMPERATIVE.

79. There is only one tense in the imperative. The second person, singular and plural, alone has an independent form of its own—the first and third persons, in both numbers, are made by the aid of the auxiliary ga, must; thus,

SINGULAR.

PLURAL.

1st, Mi ga gambe, I must speak, azuwe ga gambe, we must speak.
 2d, gamba, speak thou, gambani, speak ye.
 3d, e ga gambe, he must speak, wi ga gambe, they must speak.

yāma yodu, God made all things, they use the future, be panga Anyambia yāma yodu. Both of these modes are used, but the latter more frequently. A future tense may be determined to have a past or historical sense; 1st, when it is used in historical writing, and 2d, generally, but not invariably, when the nominative follows the verb, and stands between it and its object; thus, ne be jona Ken onwūngwē, i. e. Cain killed his brother.

The negative forms are made by prefixing a, so that one form of the verb is used in all the persons, singular and plural, except the second person plural, without the aid of the auxiliary ga; thus,

SINGULAR.	PLURAL.
1st, Mi agamba , I must not speak,	1st, azuwe agamba , we must not speak.
2d, agamba , do not speak,	2d, agambani , ye must not speak.
3d, 'agamba , he must not speak,	3d, w'agamba , they must not speak.

The passive in both cases is made by changing a into o.

If the particle kâ, which, strictly speaking, belongs to the potential mood, comes before the verb, it acquires an imperative sense without a change of the initial consonant; thus, kâ kamba, is equivalent to gamba, and kâ kambani to gambani, especially in the second and dependent number of a sentence. The phrase kâ kamba may be either of the second or third person, for either e, or o (i. e. the pronoun of the first and second persons,) coming between this auxiliary and the verb, would, according to the demands of euphony, disappear, and it must be known to be of the second or third person from the context. Perhaps this is a potential verb used as an imperative.

TENSES OF THE SUBJUNCTIVE, POTENTIAL, ETC.

80. The tenses of the Subjunctive Mood are the same as those of the indicative, with the exception of a future, which it has not. The conjunctions which are used in connection with the tenses of this mood, are jà or jâ, if, when, which always precede the pronoun which is the nominative to the verb, and is sometimes incorporated with it. This auxiliary is used in connection with the present and immediate past tenses; when the conjunction kambênle, therefore, takes the place of ja, as it does in a dependent member of a sentence, it gives it a future signification; thus, kambênle amia, therefore will know, &c. Kânle is the auxiliary particle most frequently used with the past tenses of the subjunctive. Other conjunctions may also be employed for the same purpose.

Kâ, tâ, atâ, and arâ are the particles used as auxiliaries to the potential mood. But for a full exhibition of the tenses,

MISCELLANEOUS REMARKS.

81. The particle pa following a verb in the present of the indicative, gives it the force of a past tense; thus, ya yenge yi re Anyambia denda pa, the things which God hath already or completely done. The particle pě is used like the auxiliary verb of existence; thus, mi pě nya, I am eating, mi pě nana, I am lying down or sleeping. Before a negative verb commencing with a, it incorporates itself with the verb and gives the force of never did; thus, mi pě adenda, is spoken, mi p'adenda, I never did it.

IRREGULAR VERBS.

82. These, as have already been remarked, are very few. Avoro, to know, and agami, to hate, are the only verbs in the language which commence with a vowel, and these are used only in the present of the indicative. The word biě, to come, miě, to know, to serve, are irregular, inasmuch as they do not terminate in a, and want a middle consonant. In all other respects, or rather so far as they are inflected, they are like regular verbs. The words pě, or pa, to give, nya, to eat, are regular, so far as the deviation of the imperative from the indicative is concerned, i. e. by the change of the initial consonant into its reciprocal letter; thus, from pa, to give, we get va, give; ny having no reciprocal letters is of course the same in both moods; but in the historical tenses it is necessary for both of these words to have an additional suffix, which regular verbs do not; thus, from pa we get aveni or apeni in the past tenses, &c.

Besides those above mentioned, there may be a few more irregular verbs, but they are not numerous.

VERB OF EXISTENCE.

83. There is no one verb in the language that can be considered exactly as a verb of existence, though certain parts of different verbs are used, both as substantive verbs and as auxiliaries to a few neuter verbs. In relation to pě, used as an auxiliary to neuter verbs, see section 81.

Re and are are not only used like the verb to be, but when followed by the preposition na, or when this preposition comes between it and the noun, it acquires the force of possession ; thus, are n'aniva, literally he is with money, for he has money.

Zyene or azyene seems to be the negative of re, and so also aranga, is not, as azyene aniva, he has not money.

The particle ne, which is a contraction of inle, is partly a conjunction and partly a verb, and in some few cases has the force of is. The word doana, which is regular, and has the signification to live, is also used in the sense of the substantive verb. The word pegaga, which becomes avegagi in the historical tense, is used precisely like re or are, that is, by itself, it has the force of is, was, or had been, but when followed by the preposition na, it acquires the force of possession.

All these different words might be arranged into moods and tenses, so as to correspond with all the parts of the substantive verb in English, but this would be an arbitrary arrangement, inasmuch as it would be made up of parts of at least six different words.

PARTICIPLES.

84. There are no participles belonging to the language. A preposition before the simplest form of the verb is used in a participial sense ; mi pila go punga mbuzya, i. e. I am come from throwing the net, &c. For gerunds and verbal nouns, see head of nouns.

The following paradigm of the verb kamba, to speak, will furnish a synoptical view of all the parts of a regular verb. The radical conjugation is inflected through all the moods and tenses, and will furnish an illustration of the manner in which all the other conjugations are to be inflected. As the verb undergoes no changes on account of number and person, in the indicative, subjunctive, and potential moods, the first person alone in connection with the pronoun, is laid down in these moods :

OR THE

CONSTRUCTION OF SENTENCES.

86. The object of the following remarks is to exhibit the arrangement of words in a sentence, and not to lay down any rules in relation to the principles of government and agreement.

87. Nouns and Nouns.—When two nouns come together, one of which is in the nominative and the other in the possessive case, the nominative stands first, whilst the possessive follows, and has prefixed to it, the definite pronoun of the nominative; thus, onwana w'Angila, i. e. the child of Angila, or Angila's child. The definite pronoun w in this phrase, agrees with, or belongs to onwana, and not to Angila. When three nouns come together, two of which would be in apposition and the other in the possessive case, they are separated by two definite pronouns, the second receiving as prefix the definite pronoun of the first, and the third that of the second; thus, Sonya y'onwana w'Angila, i. e. Sonya, the son of Angila; the definite pronoun y' agrees in declension with Sonya, and w' belongs to onwana, as mentioned in the example above.

88. Noun and Adjective.—The adjective, in almost all cases, follows the noun which it qualifies, and must correspond with it both in number and declension; thus, nyare mpolu, a large cow, inyare simpolu, large cows, egara evolu, a large chest, gara volu, large chests, idàmbe ivolu, a large sheep, adàmbe ampolu, large sheep, &c.; in all which cases there is a correspondence both in number and declension.

Exceptions.—The only exceptions to the general principle of construction laid down under this general head, are yā, some, which goes before the noun to which it belongs, and the numeral adjectives, which exceed ten.

89. Noun, Pronoun and the Verb.—The personal pronouns, as in English, are used to prevent the needless or too frequent use of the noun. In the Grebo, and in many other dialects of Upper Guinea, the personal pronoun is used in many cases where it is redundant; thus, they say, Dwē à nede, i. e. Dwē he is there. The personal pronoun is not so used in the Mpongwe, but the definite pronoun is; thus, they would say, Angila panga yenà, i. e. Angila is doing so, and not Angila, he is doing so. If, however, the noun relates to other than a human or the Divine being, the definite pronoun is used as the personal pronoun in Grebo; thus, nyare yi nya orova, i. e. the cow it eats grass. There is great variety of usage as to the relative position of the nominative to the verb. In the simplest phraseology it usually stands before, and if it has a definite pronoun, that comes between it and the verb, whilst the objective case follows and stands next to the verb; thus, Anyambia avangi yàma yodu, i. e. God made all things. But in historical narrative, and also when some contingency or qualifying circumstance is introduced, as of time, for example, this mode of construction is reversed, the nominative following the verb and standing betwixt it and the objective case; thus, Ne be panga Anyambia yàma yodu, i. e. and made God things all; or, gw'avangi Anyambia yàma yodu, when made God things all, the first being equivalent to, "and God made all things," and the second, "when God made all things."

In a compound sentence, it is not uncommon for one of these forms of expression to be used in one member of the sentence, and the other form in the other clause; thus, ndo gw'aviviage but when thought he isaun meyinà, vona Enge y'Anyambia, y'avieni gore yē go things these behold angel of God he came to him in nyilinu. In the first clause of this sentence, the nominative dream.

follows the verb and is incorporated with it, whilst in the second, both the nominative and its definite pronoun go before the verb. In compound sentences like the above, it is not uncommon for the verb of the second clause to have a nominative both before and after it, though the one which goes before must be a definite pronoun; thus, Gw'avieni wao go nago, when came they in house

w'ayeni wao onwana ni ngi yē.
they saw they the child and mother his.

Akin to the foregoing, but just the reverse of it, is the construction which makes one noun the nominative to two verbs, or causes the verb to be repeated after the nominative. In such sentences, the objective case and the definite pronoun which belongs to it, both go before the verb by which they are governed; thus, yenà agamba m'awuni Anyambia awunia so the words which had spoken God and had spoken to profit bia vâ rēti; the second verb, as in similar cases, is the prophet came true; always of the conjunctive form (see note at page 33). It occurs frequently, especially in historical writing, at the beginning of a sentence; thus nēganēga avangi Jisus avanga soon made Jesus and made ongili yē kwena g'owatanga. In some sentences, instead of repeating the verb, another of similar import is used, which leads to tedious redundancy; thus Ne gw'avieni Pita avila

And when came Peter and came from g'owatanga, agēnda go sumina go mbeni.

the vessel, and went to descend to the sea.

If the personal pronoun which is the nominative to the verb, has the adjective du or waodu, all, connected with it, then it is repeated before the verb; thus, indego sam anuwe du anuwe
friends my you all you

voro, &c.
know, &c.

90. Verbs and Verbs in the same sentence.—The repetition of the verb, or the use of two verbs nearly synonymous at the beginning of a sentence, has just been noticed.

In a compound sentence, the verbs which belong to the different clauses, whether they be two or more, are united to the first, provided that is in the indicative, by being placed in the conjunctive form (for which see note page 33), or by the use of the copulative conjunction and the conjunctive form of the verb at the same time; thus, omâ mârî avieni gore yě person one came to him

awianě; and again, be songa Josēf anwāngi yě n'alēngu and said to him; and followed Joseph brethren his and found wao.

When two verbs with an imperative sense come together in the same sentence, the first is found in what may be denominated the ordinary or regular form of the imperative, and the other in the irregular form; thus, rōndani Anyambia kâ love ye God and penjavenjani ampangi mě. The infinitive verb follows anokeep ye commandments his.

ther verb in much the same way as in English; sometimes it is used with and sometimes without the auxiliary particle. It is not uncommon for the conjunctive form of the verb to be used in the sense of an infinitive.

91. One of the most remarkable features in the structure of the Mpongwe language, is the decided partiality which is manifested for the use of the passive voice. In most of the dialects of Upper Guinea, the passive voice is unknown, and in those where it does exist, it is never used when it can be avoided. But in the Mpongwe a practice just the reverse prevails, i. e. an active verb is always avoided when a passive one can be forced into use. The following examples will illustrate this peculiarity.

Thus, instead of saying in direct terms, "the words which Jeremiah spoke," they say, agamba m'agambio ne Jerimaiah, i. e. the words which were spoken by Jeremiah; and so, be bulinio yě ne onwâ onomi mewânâ, i. e. he was told by the young man, instead of, the young man told him; and so, be pugizo wao ne nkândâ, i. e. they were pressed by the multitude, instead of the multitude pressed them.

It is used in cases still more remarkable; thus, ayě go nago y'ayinginio udě, i. e. he is in the house that was entered by him, instead of, the house which he entered; and so also, omedu o be tōndo mie, i. e. whoever shall be loved by me, instead of, whoever I shall love.

Instead of saying "he was born thus," they say, njani y'uyanio ne yě, literally, the birth that was borned by him. To say "Jesus was sorry for them," they say, "ayenio wao ne Jisus ekěva, i. e. "they were seen (beheld) by Jesus with sorrow."

The following specimens of Mpongwe, with an interlineation of English, will give a better idea of the structure of the language than any given number of rules.

MISCELLANEOUS REMARKS.

Although the Mpongwe language is flexible in the highest degree, is methodical in all its grammatical arrangements, and expansible to an almost unlimited extent, it is not to be inferred that it is characterized by an equal degree of copiousness in the present uncultivated state of the people by whom it is spoken. They live in a contracted world of their own and know very little about any thing beyond the reach of personal observation; they have no systems of ethics or metaphysics, and are ignorant of the researches of science; they have no knowledge of the great truths of the Christian religion, and, of course, have no terms that are applicable to these and similar topics. The genius of the language is such, however, that new terms may be introduced in relation to most of these subjects, that will be perfectly intelligible to the people, though they never heard them before. For example, there is a word sungina which means to save or rescue a thing or person from destruction; according to an established rule of grammar, a noun of agency may be derived from this, viz. ozunge, a Saviour, and an abstract noun isungina, which is salvation. So, likewise, there is a word used, viz. danduna, where one individual assumes the responsibilities of another who has offended against the laws of the country. This word involves the idea of substitution and from it may be derived a noun of agency, which means a Substitute or Redeemer, and another which involves the idea of vicarious atonement. Of course these words, as similar terms in English, must acquire a secondary meaning to express these Christian doctrines in their full force; but in their simple original character, they approach nearer to the ideas intended than similar terms in the English language.

It is not pretended that all the technical terms relating to Christianity can be derived in the manner just described, but the principal part of them may, and the language may be so expanded as to embrace every thing pertaining to Christianity, without giving up any of its distinctive peculiarities as a language.

VOCABULARY
OF THE
MPONGWE LANGUAGE;
IN TWO PARTS.

INTRODUCTION

TO THE

MPONGWE VOCABULARIES.

THE following vocabularies in two parts, 1st, English and Mpongwe, and 2d, Mpongwe and English, do not embrace all the words in the language, but those chiefly which are in most common use. There are a great many words in English which have no exact counterpart in the Mpongwe, and so vice versa. Certain words in the Mpongwe have great latitude of meaning, in consequence of the defective views that are entertained by the people on the subject of morals, as well as their want of discrimination in metaphysical science; the term mbia, for example, is indiscriminately used for good, handsome, kind, generous, just, benevolent, lenient, and whatever conveys a pleasing idea to the mind; and so mbe means bad, severe, unrelenting, vengeful, unfortunate, ugly, malignant, mischievous, and whatever else that conveys the idea of what is unpleasant. Many simple terms in English can be expressed only by a phrase in Mpongwe; thus to express the idea of hungry, they say, njâgâ njana, i. e. sick with hunger; to say he is drunk, the phrase e böngo n'alugu is used and literally means "he is captured or overpowered by rum;" the term rich, must be expressed by are n'aniva, i. e. "he is with money." Certain verbs, again, have a signification in some of the derivative conjugations wholly different from any idea contained in the radical form; thus from mie to know, comes mieza (the causative conjugation), to make know or inform; so from kumana to stand up, comes kumania to erect any thing.

• In the following vocabularies only the ground form of any one part of a word is laid down, i. e. the singular number of nouns, the first declension of each adjective, and the radical conjugation of the verb. All the derivative parts of each word can be determined by turning to the rules laid down in the grammar.
